old friend Sullivan," he whispered.

A journalist interviewing Sullivan toward the end of his career might have asked him whether he, Sullivan, thought that any of his music was likely to be remembered in the middle of the coming century. The composer would have answered (assuming that he felt like giving an honest answer), "Oh yes, it is possible that my Irish Symphony or my oratorio, The Light of the World, or my choral work, The Golden Legend, will still be played in 1950." The interviewer, who probably had seen The Mikado seven times and knew all the tunes by heart, would then have asked about this operetta or about Pinafore or The Gondoliers. Sullivan would doubtless have answered, "These will be forgotten."

TO THE end of his career, Sullivan depreciated those of his works on which alone his fame rests. His own slights were strengthened by the opinions of all his well-wishing, well-groomed, well-connected friends, who felt that in writing the most charming English operettas he was stooping, and that what he ought to be doing was to write worthy and elevating music in grand proportions. It was a worthy age, and Sullivan had worthy friends. Queen Victoria and her time took things seriously, and one was perhaps a little suspect if he were lightly satirical. This suspicion troubled Sullivan's soul. Nevertheless, he continued his collaboration with Gilbert, which began after both men had already obtained a certain prominence (Gilbert being forty-one and Sullivan thirty-five at the time of their first meeting), because Sullivan was a man who desired to live in an aristocratic style, and the Savoy operettas provided him with the necessary wherewithal. No, that is not quite true. Money could not have been the only reason. Indeed, it would have been impossible for any man to produce The Gondoliers or Iolanthe merely to keep the pot boiling. Sullivan did feel for these works an affection and an enthusiasm that were genuine.

The highly respectable and correctly Victorian side of his personality is but one facet, and this shows itself in his now forgotten serious music. The other side of the musician is the sparkling side. Endowed with a fine gift for melody, he developed to highest precision his peculiar talent of fitting witty words to witty music. The resulting product is both good comic poetry and good music. Sullivan's melodies at their best are enchanting musical inspirations. Yet they are not required to lead a bachelor's life; they are completely, happily married to Gilbert's words. The fusion is unique. In Gilbert and Sullivan the key word is "and."

ALL THE same, he suffered through the ambivalence of his feelings and he continued to do so throughout the 14 years of successful partnership. He longed to do "important" work. He felt that he deferred to Gilbert and effaced himself in favor of the librettist. During one of their quarrels, he demanded that Gilbert, for a change, defer to him, and Gilbert, the more reasonable of the two men, had to point out to him that their collaboration could exist only if both of them considered themselv equals. It was this false pride colli ing with Gilbert's irascibility whi caused the final rupture, thou they ostensibly quarreled over t purchase of a rug for the Sav Theater.

Posterity has long considere them as equals, and any discussi of which may be the more i portant, Gilbert or Sullivan, foolish speculation. As children two equal parents, the operet turned out to be comic mast pieces.

Plays date fast. Humorous pla date faster. Musical comedies da fastest. Yet, Gilbert and Sulliv are largely exempted from t yellowing process. In spite of to cal allusions which we no long understand or care about, in spi of some execrable puns, in spi of a touch of cloying sentime here and there, the works rema fresh and green. And this s them apart from the other op ettas, the Victor Herberts and R dolf Frimls and Reginald De K vens, who also wrote attracti

The United Nations Secretariat Building, like a shining web to hold the world together, mirrors skyscraper neighbors in its windowed façade. See it in New York forever, we hope, but particularly during U.N. Week, Oct. 16-24.

How to leave home and like it

by Louisa M. Comstock

Today's best hope for peace is United Nations plus you. That's the best reason in the world for you to make a pilgrimage this fall to New York's new shrine. It's a shining, skyward wedge, right there by the river near 42nd Street, 39 stories, remarkably built of marble, glass, aluminum, and the best hopes mankind has ever hoped for its own future.

It is the United Nations Secretariat Building, of course—a clean, sobering, lovely sight, whether you see it in sun, rain, or mist, or against the peculiarly vivid blue sky that is Manhattan's own autumn trademark. It is still in the making, to be finished by the end of the year, but October is an appropriate time to get your first view of it, for this month marks the fifth annual observance of United Nations Week, October 16 through 24. Slogan for the week—and really for all time—"Today's best hope for peace is U.N. plus you," which means that the closer you keep posted on what goes on in U.N., the better job U. N. can do.

This idea comes home with a wallop once you've actually seen the delegates at work at Lake Success, and you can see them during a New York visit if you write ahead for tickets to the sessions you'd like to attend. Address Admissions Office, United Nations, Lake Success, N. Y. And for all-round regular briefings in U.N. activities, join the American Association for the United Nations, which keeps its members informed through frequent bulletins on the U.N. AMERICA'S SMART SET

PHOTOGRAPH BY EE EVIA

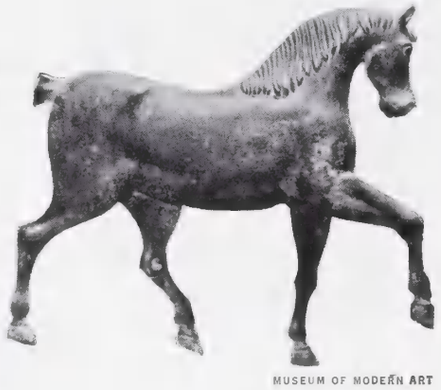
We have an abundant inheritance in American design. Most people don't realize that America has produced 300 years of sensibly planned, sensitively executed articles for everyday use. They are unaware that 20,000 examples, gleaned from every corner of the United States, are documented in the Index of American Design, and are on file at the National Gallery of Art. In these you can trace the continuity of spirit between our past and our present. You will discover that the American Style is new in form but old in spirit.

Four hundred selections from the Index of American Design are reproduced in this book written by the curator, Erwin O. Christensen, with introduction by Holger Cahill. The book will be published by Macmillan Co. this month.

You can trace the roots of the American Style to America's folk art

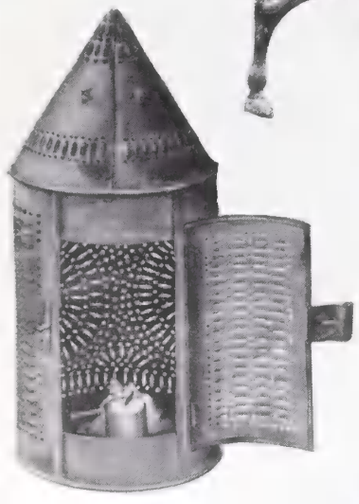
by Holger Cahill

Mr. Cahill was National Director of the Federal Art Project of the W.P.A. at the time it collected and documented America's vast and rich design heritage. He is probably the leading authority on America's folk art.

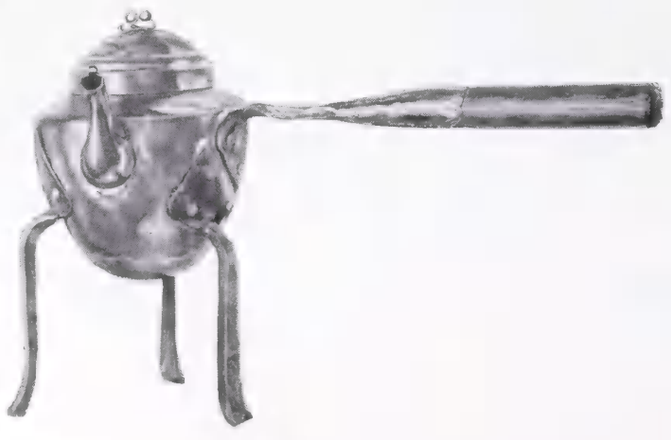


Every country's folk art has a long memory while it also prophesies the future. That's why the age-old promises of American folk art can be seen fulfilled in the new American Style

It is in our folk art, the expression of the average man, that we discover the true spirit and depth of our design inheritance. Folk art is the candid-camera shot among the arts, the product of innocence and unguarded moments, unposed, direct, honest. It is the grassroots legacy left us by our skilled craftsmen and gifted amateurs. Their art is both a mirror of the sense and sentiment of our American ways, and an authentic expression of American experience.



But the folk art of any nation anticipates the future at the same time that it looks far back into the past: and America's is no different. Thus it gives us clues, dating from the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Centuries, to what is happening today. It shows that there is a continuity between the American past and the American Style of the present.



What is folk art? What kind of things does it include?

MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

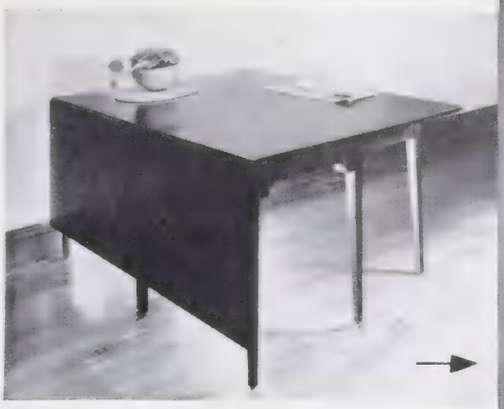
NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

PHOTOGRAPH OPPOSITE BY LESLIE GILL

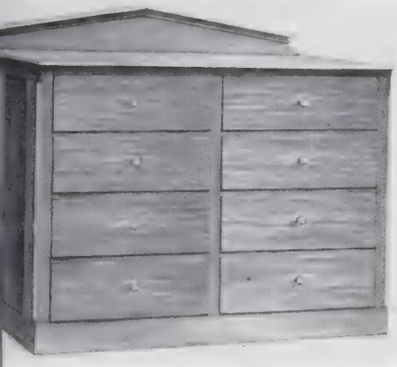
In our heritage of American folk art we find strains which still motivate American design: simplicity, fitness to purpose, honest use of materials, invention and creativeness. At the left are a cast-metal weather-vane horse from the Museum of Modern Art, a pierced tin candle-lantern and a copper kettle, both from the Index of American Design. Opposite is a group from Mr. Cahill's collection of folk art and Shaker furniture.



Old prophecies are coming true

Our new American Style was forecast a century or more ago by anonymous designers who applied ingenuity, common sense, and a talent for simplification to everyday objects. You can't miss the continuity of this viewpoint which still motivates contemporary designers

by Sara Little



PHOTOGRAPH BY NEW YORK TIMES STUDIO

The drop-leaf foreshadowed a modern space-saver

One sign of a vital art is its ability to assimilate the work of others as George Nelson did in designing this table. Wood hinges, center support, and set-back legs were his contribution. Herman Miller Furniture Co. Antique drop-leaf, above, is from Museum of City of New York.

A late Shaker piece anticipated a double chest

It makes good sense to divide one large chest for use by two people. Double chests, like the recent design opposite by Herman DeVries, are not new. Witness Shaker chest above from the Index of American Design.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

No nation's design springs into full flower overnight. Each generation makes traditional forms a little better. Example: George Nakashima's captain's chair, far right, Knoll Assoc. Antique chair, Helena Penrose.

The Southwest Mission craftsman who made the chest, above, frankly revealed joining of horizontal members with vertical. Modern designer Abel Sorensen made decorative "inlays" in his table by allowing birch leg supports to come through mahogany top (see sketch). Chest is from the Index of American Design. Table from Knoll Associates.

Whenever similarity exists between these pairs of old and new designs, it is not the result of copying. It is a coincidence which occurs because contemporary American designers are inspired by the same values and have the same objectives as their early predecessors

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

The parlor chair inspired simplified curves

OGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

A stiff settee is today a comfortable couch

It takes many people working in the same direction over a long period to produce a mature design. The eighteenth-century settee from the Index of American Design, right, was a good idea. But how much more inviting is the modern couch above designed by Van Keppel and Green.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER: PICTOR

Utility baskets are designed for modern needs

We no longer raise bread in baskets such as the one above found in Amana, Iowa, by researchers for the Index of American Design. But the same type of basketry is still produced in shapes that fill the needs of our American Style of outdoor living.

The Shakers believed in comfort, but frowned on ostentatious luxury. The comfort of their famous rocker was vouched for by the thousands sold by mail. Its slender lines forecast the slim, light look of modern chairs like this one by T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings.

Need was the motive that prompted early American designers and guided the form of their work. Need is still the motive which inspires the contemporary American Style. Designers today produce conveniences like wardrobe, right, because so many people have inadequate closet space

The Shaker cupboard predicted today's new wardrobe

Inspired by their conviction that order was heaven's first law, the Shakers invented hundreds of ways to meet specific storage needs. Style is again directed by need in Robsjohn-Gibbings' wardrobe for The Widdicomb Furniture Co. that will help solve closet shortage.

FIRST house of the year

This house won top honors because:

It shows that a good house can be built for less than $10,000.

It has complete privacy, even though 75% of the walls are glass, and even when built on a 50′ x 100′ lot—thanks to the proper use of fences.

It uses "optical illusion" to make 1,000 square feet look and feel like 1,500 or more.

It proves that even a small house can use Climate Control principles.

Architect: A. Quincy Jones, Jr.
Landscaping: Sessions Nursery Co.
Furnished especially for House Beautiful
by the Burnett Furniture Company, San Diego.

Optical illusions created by intelligent design give this small house a feeling of space far in excess of its actual dimensions. See how the living room seems to extend through glass wall to fence beyond terrace. Other side of room (see opposite page) opens into dining area which is visually a part of living room, but so neatly defined you feel you are eating in a separate room. Fireplace wall adds to feeling of space by use of glass above brick.

When you walk through the house, it is difficult to realize that the enclosed space is based on a conventional rectangular plan, which is one secret of its low cost. To see how this plan may be adapted to other sites, turn to page 232.

It was the American Institute of Architects, not HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, that singled out this house for top honors. But we couldn't be in more whole-hearted agreement. For it proves that the ideas we constantly crusade for—privacy, Climate Control, and the warm, welcoming look of the American Style—are not matters of money, but of sound planning and sensitive design.

The architect's aim was to plan a house which a contractor could build for people who already owned a lot, but who could not afford the higher costs of a house designed especially for them. The one you see in the photographs is a model house built by Vistendahl, Inc. at 2548 El Cajon Boulevard, San Diego. It can be duplicated on any lot in San Diego County for $9,450, plus the cost of the fences which would vary according to the site. The plans have been approved by the San Diego office of the F.H.A. and also by mortgage companies for conventional loans.

Another demonstration model of the house is now being built by Associated Building Contractors of Southern California, Inc. in the Los Angeles area, where it is expected that the price will be about $300 higher.

In other localities, of course, the cost would vary. In colder climates you would want to use insulating glass in the large window areas, plus more insulation (Continued on next page)

This house has no fancy, stylized doorway to impress passers-by, but the graceful trellis plays a more important, dual role. It leads the way naturally from garage to house, and it also forms an attractive background for the living-room terrace at the right.

The master bedroom with its completely enclosed garden is a truly secluded retreat and seems larger than it is because south wall is entirely of glass. Notice small high windows on west wall for good ventilation. Bedspread is neither a quilt nor an imitation, but an inexpensive jacquard weave with quilt-type pattern which is copied in handmade felt "pincushion" on wall.

A duplicate of this house is nearing completion at 268 Kenneth Road, Glendale, California. It will be open for inspection October 15. Interiors will also be reproduced at Jackson Furniture Co. in Oakland.

and a more powerful heating system than the unit of 55,000 b.t.u. capacity which is sufficient for the balmy weather of San Diego. For the New York City area, for instance, we obtained an estimate of $15,000 which would include radiant floor heating and insulating glass throughout. This estimate is based on the prices prevailing in June, 1950. For warm, humid climates, much of the fixed glass should be made as moving sash—which would again change costs.

But look what you get for your money: The floor space measures exactly 1,000 square feet, which means that the house would be acceptable in many restricted neighborhoods where smaller houses are taboo. There are 8,500 cubic feet of enclosed area. But wait! The happy combination of large glass areas (totaling approximately 75% of the exterior walls), with the carefully placed fences, more than double the living space that is actually usable in mild weather—even on a minimum lot of 50 by 100 feet. More important, the glass and the fences double the feeling of spaciousness in all kinds of weather, since the rooms seem to extend beyond the glass walls all the way to the fences.

Study the site plans on page 232, and you will see that, as far as privacy is concerned, the living-room can face the street or the side of the lot, so there would be no need to turn the house to a disadvantageous direction. It is the fences, again, and also the relationship of the garage to the house that made this plan adaptable to any but a north-front lot. Since orientation is the first fundamental of Climate Control, this house is qualified for many climates more difficult to cope with than that of Southern California. Since the roof has a wide overhang on all four sides, sun control is assured for climates where summer shading is needed. In addition, the high windows at each end of the house could insure good ventilation in hot, muggy climates by providing an escape for the hot stagnant air near the ceiling.

When this house won the A.I.A. award, we made arrangements with Burnett's of San Diego to equip it with furnishings which would represent as good a value as the house itself. The cost of the furniture selected from Manuel Martin's "California House" group, for the three main rooms shown here, total less than $1,000, excluding box spring and mattress. The wood is hardy Philippine mahogany in a light "wheat" finish. The upholstery is covered with cotton denim.

Fabrics and floor coverings are practical materials, too, and all at reasonable prices. Only the decorative accessories are outside of the low-cost range. Most of these are the work of contemporary American craftsmen and reflect the distinction which hand-crafted products lend to even the simplest, most practical interiors.

An architectural historian, surveying pre-Civil War American houses, has pointed out that there were in those days "big and small houses, yes; but rich and poor houses never." Because this house is a small house, with all the good-living advantages of a "rich" house, it is most expressive of the American tradition and the emerging American Style. For instance, what luxury to have every room in the house open onto its own private garden!

The arrangement of the kitchen is a pertinent example of the typically American concern for the welfare of those who do the work. Not only is it uncommonly light, airy, and convenient, but it allows whoever is cooking dinner to keep in close touch with the rest of the party. And eating outdoors is just as easy as eating in, since the stove is no farther from the terrace than it is from the dining room.

You can drive by this house, which is built on a corner lot in a closely built residential section, and not even notice it! It is neither the pretentious type that shouts: "Look at me," nor the bizarre type that sticks out on the landscape like the proverbial sore thumb.

You can see from this small-scale model how living space seems to overflow the walls and spill out to terraces. Real boundary of each room is fence beyond glass wall. Terrace at lower right of photograph is at back of house.

This house has no "façade," since you can't get any view of front exterior that is not broken up by fences. More important is its integration with fences and site. See how garage and extensions of house walls create bedroom garden.

The fences are the key...

. . . to the privacy, the Climate Control, and the sense of spaciousness that make this small house rich in living value

The three-dimensional quality of this closed-louver fence makes an enclosed area seem bigger than it it were fenced with flat boards. In a muggier climate louvers might be left open to admit breeze. $3.50, linear foot.

Drying yard is screened from dining terrace by open fence that stops the eye without seeming to wall you in. $3.25, linear foot. This area has direct access to utility room, children's room; doubles as children's play yard.

Although the kitchen is open to the living-dining room, guests' view is cut off by high serving counter. Working at this Thermador stove, you are within conversational range of the party, but no one can see what you are doing. Ceiling ventilator carries off cooking odors.

To get even a glimpse of the kitchen sink from the dining area, you have to climb up above average eye level as our photographer did. Walls and doors are fir plywood with same finish as living room. Note luxury of window wall, practical only because of fences outside.

A New Kind of House, Born of our Times

by Jean Murray Bangs

Several new types of living have appeared on the American scene during the last couple of decades. One of the most spectacular of these is producing a brand-new kind of environment: a luxurious small house whose main purpose is to simplify life almost entirely, instead of complicating it—a small house with no relation to the small houses we have known in the past.

Usually this new type of house places great emphasis on entertaining, so it is especially equipped to handle large parties of 50 or 60 people, even though it may of such houses has been limited to a small, affluent have only one or two bedrooms. Up to now, ownership group. But the influence of this new house type is being widely felt, for it is being copied. You might say that it is to the house field what sport clothes are to the apparel field. For the playhouse lets you feel easy and relaxed, as opposed to stiff, formal, and dressy.

This newcomer to our numerous ways of American living might be called, very properly, a playhouse. For its chief purpose is ease of living—to have the house pamper the owner, instead of the owner pampering the house. It is usually small, though it has no relation to the small house as we have known it before. For it is designed for people who are leading different lives, with new values and with a kind of casual manners that is typically American.

The playhouse is as luxurious as can be imagined—as luxurious as our American inventive genius can produce, which is considerable. It is really a little house with big rooms. Actually, the playhouse is a variant, or more correctly, an offshoot of the big house, which at one time provided the only means for truly luxurious living and a gay life. This new playhouse has not developed out of our middle-class concept of home. It is not a house where the chief emphasis is on the rearing of children as in "The Station Wagon Way of Life." (See HOUSE BEAUTIFUL for June 1950.) It has sprung from the owners' wish to enjoy themselves and to be surrounded by the ultimate in ease, convenience, glamour, and trouble-free housekeeping, without any of the burdens of keeping a large domestic staff and its resultant heavy overhead. It combines luxury with freedom from housekeeping responsibility.

Such houses always start with an important natural site. The most favored sites are those which have either a magnificent view or complete seclusion, or both. Because of their privacy and considerable natural beauty, they give a feeling of being apart from the everyday, work-a-day world.

They use many of the elements that the old big houses used: marble baths, sunken tubs, mirror-lined dressing rooms, the finest wood finishes, custom furniture. But they have other things the big house didn't have: fantastically complete mechanized kitchens (since the owner may do the cooking at least some of the time): beautiful, flowing inter-relation of indoors and outdoors through glass walls, heated swimming pools, and well-furnished pool houses: gardens and terraces designed to be lived in, like rooms, rather than walked through occasionally as in the old European formula: glamorous built-in lighting indoors and in the garden: built-in sound systems for radio and records that stress high fidelity tone reproduction: built-in movie projectors and built-in screens. (Continued on next page)

The Playhouse may not be the house type you build. But it is sure to influence your ideas of what is good and beautiful. See how a fine playhouse looks and works on next 13 pages

Above all, these houses stress an atmosphere of glamour and they give the occupants a sense of luxurious ease.

There are two variations on the playhouse. One is for the people who crave luxury only, not luxury and fun. These do not have notable facilities for play. The desirability of this kind of house lies in the fact that it almost does away with the need for servants. Things can be kept running by someone coming in for a few hours a day.

The other variant of the luxurious small house is for people who do not care to keep up a large house after their children have grown up and moved away. In this house, too, the emphasis is on ease of living, rather than on play. The ample means and mental maturity of the people building such houses often results in great dignity and charm.

One thing about all three versions of the playhouse is remarkable: None of them imitates forms taken from the rustic shelters of the hunter or backwoodsman, as many of our resort houses do. Neither do they imitate "period" forms. Their form and decoration is pure Twentieth Century—with much emphasis on harnessing every device that is capable of producing luxury and glamour.

The Twentieth Century has indeed brought us many glamour-making devices. The professional designers serving leisure-minded clients are vying with each other to produce ever-more magical effects. They are discovering that a magical atmosphere is produced by architectural lighting effects. Large areas of low light intensity (like a glass ceiling illuminated from above), indirect cove lights, spot lighting of important areas, the use of outdoor garden lighting, which can produce the effect of moonlight in a room are highly effective mood- (Continued on page 232)

A controlled environment that pampers the owners by eliminating all the discomforts of variable weather is a fundamental of twentieth-century luxury. Deep overhangs on the south side of this house shade both indoor and outdoor areas in summer. On the north side, overhangs are even deeper to shield rooms from sky glare which comes not from sun but from sky diffusion, greater on north than on south. The sliding glass walls are mechanized to move electrically at the mere flip of a switch.

Greatest imaginable luxury—so understated it doesn't proclaim itself

Only by studying the plan can you get an adequate conception of the true luxury offered by this unpretentious-looking house. Its non-conformist shape shows what happens when houses are designed to accommodate a way of living rather than a stylistic pattern. Bedroom wing has two luxurious suites, each with bath-and-dressing areas as large as most people's bedrooms. Note reappearance of old-fashioned linen room containing a sink and counter, and ironing board for clothes-pressing, plus linen shelves. Music closet houses a record and radio system wired to whole house.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

So characteristic of the American Style are the long low lines of this deceptively simple house! Its lack of ostentation tells you it was designed strictly for owners' comfort, not to impress the public. Hidden from street, glass areas don't spoil privacy.

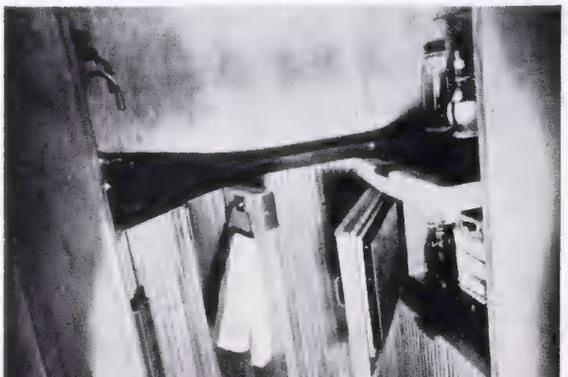
A new kind of glamour for dining



Out-of-sight manipulation of sound, light, and heat create an atmosphere of luxury and glamour. The easy-to-clean floor (of Virginia greenstone) has chill removed by radiant-panel heat, and body-heat loss to windows is prevented by hot air delivered from slot in ceiling over all glass openings. Footsteps are muffled by acoustical plaster on ceiling. Doors to kitchen (left) and bar (right) are almost invisible when closed. (See opposite.)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Conveniences are neatly concealed

Even an enclosed working area, like bar in dining room, has the finest cabinetwork, with refrigerator and bar-sink sleekly built in. Cabinets have full-length piano hinges guaranteeing perfect operation. Lighted ceiling is example of combining glamour and utility.

See how the paneled wall frames and dramatizes the handsome overscale buffet. This kind of integration is the happy consequence of close collaboration between architect and decorator. All the woodwork and furniture throughout house are of carefully chosen, bleached walnut. This house abounds in exquisite architectural cabinetwork, so well designed and executed that you hardly notice the "hidden" doors on either side of the buffet. (See above left.)

are merged in one big room

The new luxury is the feeling of spaciousness achieved by combining what used to be a series of rooms into one expansive area. It is also achieved by a close relationship with the outdoors, so interior space seems to flow on out to the garden, as it does here. Another luxury: to enjoy movies in your own living room! Projector and reels are housed in cane-paneled cabinet at left; screen rolls down from ceiling over fireplace below.

This magnificently equipped corner is a room within a room. Behind the huge built-in desk with inset globe are cabinets containing recessed roller maps which pull up, hook to ceiling. Note nice woodwork detail of bookshelves, and how cove lighting throws light on the books.

The optical illusion of rooms within a room is created by carrying the wall paneling across the ceiling as a canopy over the conversation areas. This defines the room without using a solid wall. It marks off the "sitting room" from the study and from traffic areas.

Understatement—

the new American elegance

A choice of symphonies at your finger tips, a sofa for afternoon naps, an easy chair with a wonderful view—all these go to show how a bedroom can pamper you, even though it looks as unpretentious as this one. Here again the paneling is carried across the ceiling to create a canopy for the bed and mark off the sleeping area. Its beautifully mitered corners are typical of the fine wood detail everywhere. Framed square in wall at left of bed is loud speaker for music system, controlled by dial in nightstand. (See close-up on opposite page.)

A dressing room that pampers its owner

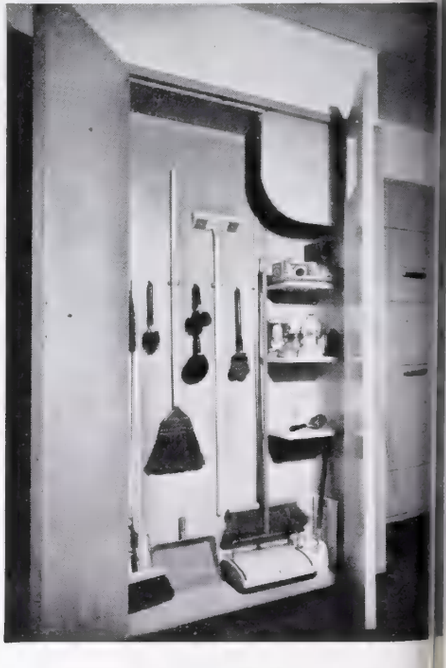
You can bathe and dress completely without once moving out of this marble-lined room. Drawers for shirts, linen, socks, ties, and shoes are all within reach of one spot. So is the soiled-linen hamper. Round shaving mirror, set flush, is framed with fluorescent light. There is electric heat as well as warm air. Around the corner from partition at right is a bath with built-in rubbing table, and a shower stall with a marble seat.

Built-in sound, controlled from any room

The whole house is wired for sound. Almost every room has a control dial like this one in the bedside cabinet of the master bedroom. This built-in piece is planned to keep within reach everything you might want by your bed.

In the soundproof music closet you can try out all the new records without disturbing anyone else in the house. Shelves store hundreds of records. This room also houses all machinery for radio receiving and the record player.

From a portable wooden box like a cigarette box, you can dial your favorite A.M. or F.M. radio station or the phonograph. Buttons regulate volume or pitch, turn room speaker or whole system on or off. Box is shown here on arm of sofa.



Fine cabinetwork in kitchen

In a truly luxurious house, fine woods and workmanship do not stop short of the kitchen. Here, all walls and cabinets are birch plywood with rubbed lacquer finish. Tambour doors, unlike swinging doors, may be left open while kitchen is in use. Lower cabinets are raised 12 inches from floor to eliminate stooping. Carefree surfaces include plastic counter tops, marine-deck floor covering. Ceiling of acoustical tile absorbs the clatter.

Storage space planned for specific uses

In a double cupboard reserved for pots and pans, all shelves may be adjusted according to height of utensil. Drawers below are for shallow baking pans.

All cleaning tools and materials are kept in perfect order in a special cupboard. Music from sound system comes from loud speaker through door cut-out.

Precise details account for both looks and operation

Even the hood, installed over the stove to carry away cooking odors, is nicely designed, finely executed. Cupboard doors have full-length piano hinges, usually reserved for very fine furniture.

A New Kind of Luxury

True luxury demands aesthetics as well as performance. While this house rates high in creature comforts, its real distinction lies in the aesthetic perfection of every detail, thanks to the fact that architect and interior designer worked out their ideas together from the very start. You can see the effect again and again in the lyrical use of wood and in the harmony of scale between house and furnishings. One of the most delightful, though subtle, results is the recurring motif of the molding: rounds, half-rounds and quarter-rounds which occur again and again in both house and furniture. Study the many variations of this theme here.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

One recurring theme in different variations

In the recess at the corner of the living room, half-rounds are used to form an over-scaled pattern. The same design is carried over to what appears to be the adjoining wall. It is not a wall, but a sliding door that closes off main living areas from private bedroom wing. When open, it disappears into fireplace wall. See larger half-rounds in glass wall at the left.

The furniture shows other variations

When you can afford custom-designed, custom-made furniture, and your architect and interior designer work together from the start, you can have one decorative theme carried throughout the house and furnishings. Here, the half-rounds of the wall moldings become full-rounds on the legs and stretchers of chairs. Bamboo legs of table are another variation.

Filtered light is one secret of a magical atmosphere. Here it is created by inserting panels of grass cloth between the double glass panes of the window wall—a device which also takes the place of draperies.

The American passion for efficiency

It's American to pamper our women — to lighten their work load and reduce their drudgery. Here's a new line of kitchen cabinets that pamper through efficiency

by Charlotte Conway

A complete baking unit, left, has 33" high maple work surface, deep drawers for rolling pin, sifter, etc., files for tins, shallow shelf for seasonings. Pull-out drawer, above, has removable stainless steel liner for waste paper. Continuous shelf under sink is sized for packages of soaps, detergents. Upper cabinet is designed for salad fixings. Even the door has shelves for seasonings, and a clamp for salad bowl.

The beverage center houses everything needed for mixing drinks. An assortment of glasses is ready behind sliding doors of the wall section. Mixes have their own compartment in the base. The main ingredients on the work surface can be concealed by rolling down tambour door. All doors can be fitted with locks.

This kitchen has four new improvements that you've probably never seen in a kitchen before: (1) It uses the space between the base cabinets and the hanging cabinets. (2) All doors are sliding, either sidewise or up and down. (3) Three different heights (for base cabinets) are provided for different work uses. (4) You can sit down and work at these cabinets, thanks to knee room.

Small changes, all of these. But most kitchens are pretty good these days, so improvements are very likely to be refinements. But if you care about efficiency, as Americans do passionately, these refinements matter. These little things make a big difference if you count steps, or have backaches because counters are the wrong height, or get tired on your feet from continuous standing. "That's a fine kettle of fish. By the way—speaking of fish—what in the world shall we do with all the food left from the party?"

We were having an open house during the Christmas holidays, and I was in the kitchen getting out the big turkey to serve. There it was—beautifully browned and steaming hot—when my daughter Susie came through the kitchen.

with climate control

You have been reading in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL for the last twelve months, about how to manipulate your climate and take the sting out of your weather. Here's a new way to reduce the length of your winter. Do it optically. Keep the look of good weather, even though the thermometer says otherwise.

If you can keep the scene outside your windows green as long as possible, you take some of the curse off the winter. Certainly, the picture window and the glass wall make it almost imperative to keep the garden green all year.

Everybody knows that evergreen shrubs, which hold their rich summer-green all during the winter, are the plantings to use for a green winter effect. But how to hold back the browning of winter that comes to your lawn is not so well known.

REPORT ON THE

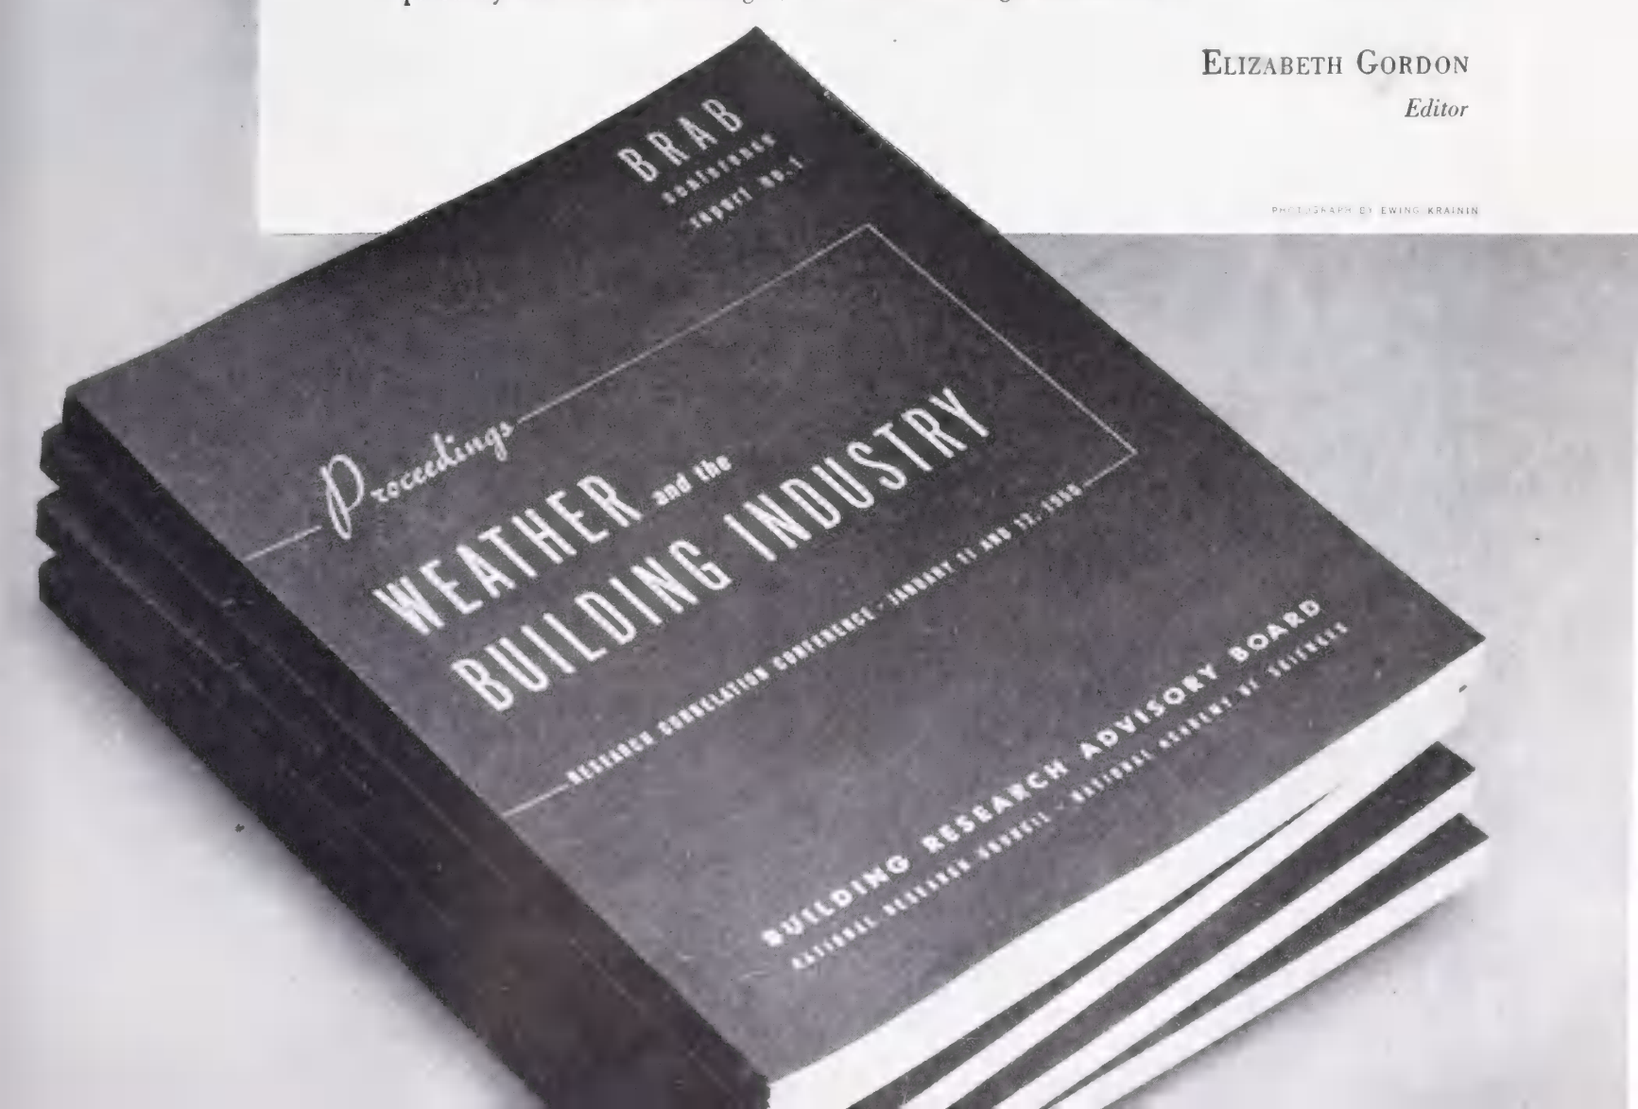
Climate Control Project

THIS MONTH Climate Control is one year old—in the pages of House Beautiful. A year ago 58 pages of the October House Beautiful introduced you to our research project, the aim of which was to make your life easier, by showing you how to improve your comfort.

Twelve months, 75,000 words, and 11,000 manhours later we can tell you that Climate Control has been joyfully received by House Beautiful readers. For you have understood what we have been trying to do for you.

You have caught the main idea: that a good house in Amarillo, Texas, cannot look like, or be built like, a good house in New Rochelle, New York. You have grasped the even harder-to-understand truth: that good houses on opposite sides of the street can't be identical-in-looks, and layout.

You readers are not the only ones to welcome Climate Control data. Every issue of the Technical Bulletin of the American Institute of Architects now carries the charted information of a different climate zone, prepared by our chief climatologist, Dr. Paul Siple. This data is the real backbone of our research project. So the working practitioners—architects and engineers—are getting the full scientific data that our research work has developed.



That's not all. Last January, 200 technicians and pure scientists in the building industry met for a two-day meeting at the National Research Council in Washington to consider how they could go on, each in his own field, with House Beautiful's pioneering research. Alert operative builders have also begun to incorporate Climate Control principles in their houses and in their subdivisions.

It is facts like these that prove House Beautiful has made a contribution on all levels of the home-building industry: to you, to architects, to engineers and to speculative builders.

We have always been dedicated to the belief that the truth shall make us free. That when everybody knows more we will have better houses. To that end, we are beginning to get somewhere.

What IS Climate Control?

"Climate Control": what is it all about? Think of a greenhouse. It turns winter into summer—or something very like it. It makes unbearable hot weather bearable. It slows down wind, or creates a breeze when there isn't any. Well, that's Climate Control.

You know how sensitive a flower is, how it needs just the right light, the right warmth, the right humidity. You know how carefully a race-horse is housed, or a prize milk cow. You know how a dog or a cat is forever hunting for the one spot in the house that is "just right."

Well, people are even more sensitive. Feeling just a little too cool, a little too hot, really raises the dickens with body and soul.

Besides, what is expected of the human animal is so vastly more difficult than what is expected of a race-horse, a milk cow, a geranium! It involves so much more intricate functioning of the organism. A mother cares for and guides her children. A man sits in an office and designs a machine, or coins an advertising slogan, or talks another man around to his way of thinking. These things are difficult.

It doesn't help one bit if a cold draft creeps down your left shoulder while you are trying to do this, or you are sticky with perspiration, or a puff of breeze picks up papers from your desk, or throws a lamp over. One's performance in modern life depends a lot on working conditions. This has been shown by scientific experiments. It has been proved time and again also by hard-boiled, dollars and cents observations in factories and offices. When people are a little too warm or a little too cold, they just don't turn out the work, that's all.

You may say to yourself: "Don't be soft. What if it is a little hot? What if there is a little draft? Mind over matter, you know." But the personnel manager, the industrial engineer, the doctor, the teacher, the child psychologist—they all know that's nonsense. If you want the human animal to do his stuff, you've got to treat him right.

It takes awfully little to make a person uncomfortable. Small differences in the "indoor weather" make big difference in how you feel.

This is lucky. It is what makes Climate Control possible. It means that a small improvement in the indoor weather makes a big improvement in comfort. Climate Control can't change a Vermont climate into a Florida climate. But it can make the small changes that take the sting out of the Vermont winter, or the squeeze out of the Florida summer.

You can control the climate by the exact placing of your house. It makes a big difference whether the house is on a north slope or south slope, east slope or west slope, on top of a hill or in a valley. Which direction most of your windows face makes a difference. Vines, trees, hedges, windbreaks make the "spot climate" of your land different from the general climate of the locality. These simple devices, which most people use thoughtlessly, or not at all, can make your "spot climate" worse or better. They are the ABCs of Climate Control—for with them you can produce: wind control—for winter and summer, sun pockets—for spring and fall, west-wall shading—for hot weather.

You can control the climate with machinery and gadgets: furnaces and boilers, attic fans, de-humidifiers, air-conditioning devices and insulation. But it is not enough simply to install such machines in the house. The house should be designed to make the machines work well. For example, it is difficult and expensive to air-condition the hot upstairs rooms of a poorly-built house. It is easy and inexpensive to air-condition a basement room that tends to be naturally cool in the first place.

Take the opposite. In a room with cold, poorly insulated walls, the harder you heat the more drafts you get and the less comfortable you feel. The remedy is not more heat, but better insulation of the walls and different placing of radiators.

You see, Climate Control is really the art of using science to make yourself more comfortable. Most of the things you do in controlling climate are based on scientific knowledge. But, to combine these parts, so the right ones work together and interlock, is an art. We say "art" because, after the facts are in hand about a climate's needs and requirements, judgment (about how to use and interlock the possible cures) still has to be brought into play.

Strangely enough, this art has been badly neglected. The architectural profession too often, tends to think of aesthetics first and last, and so may forget about performance. Technical people are trained to be specialists in one type of product, and so are slow to think about how their product must integrate with the other products. The mechanically-minded have said, "with our machines we can make you a perfect climate." The nature boys have said, "give us wind, or sun, or trees, and we'll fix whatever is the matter with your climate."

The truth is: you need to use all of them, in whatever proper proportions are called for by your particular climate. Either sort of control, without the cooperation of the other, cannot do a good enough job except at great cost.

Climate Control will continue to be a monthly feature of House Beautiful, We will continue to try to bring you the best thinking plus the best knowledge of our times—so you may constantly step up your control of your environment, and so make your life easier.

How you can get the charts and technical data on Climate Control

Through the cooperation of the American Institute of Architects, technical reports on HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S Climate Control Project are being published for the benefit of architects, contractors, manufacturers and home-owners. These reports analyze precipitation, temperature, wind velocity and direction, humidity, sunshine, etc. They are published for each region studied in the Climate Control Project, and are available concurrently with appearance of the general regional story in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL. Reports are now available on the following regions: Mid-Ohio, Metropolitan New York and New Jersey, Southern Florida, Southwestern Desert, Missouri River Valley, Gulf Coast. Price: 50c each from Administrator, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S Climate Control Project, 572 Madison Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

There are only

you can manipulate to get climate control

THE LIST is delightfully short. The whole trick lies in knowing how much or how little, how thick or how thin, how wide or how long, how deep or how many. For Climate Control is entirely a matter of degree. And every climate in the United States experiences some of the weather (even though briefly) of every other part.

windows

What direction should they face to get (or not get) sun and wind?
Should they be high or low on the wall, or full height?
Should they all open, or can some be fixed?
Should they be insulated with storm sash or insulating glass?
Will they need to be covered with draperies for warmth at night?
Do they need to be equipped with overhangs, side fins or flexible louvers to keep out sun and sky glare when it is not wanted?

insulation

How much is needed in my climate?
How thick should it be?
How many places should it be used?
Which type (mass or reflective) do I need?
Does my climate need combinations of both types?
Do my windows need to be insulated and weatherstripped?
How many layers of air wash should I have between layers of insulation?

shade makers

overhangs, fins and louvers, awnings,
trees, vines

What are they to shade...walls or windows, or both?
Which type does the shading most adequately—at different times of the year—of the day?
Can flexible louvers do a better job?
Are trellises with vines a better answer?
How early and how late in the day will they work?
Which of the numerous kinds of jobs would these different shade-makers do best—and on which side of the house?

—to have it or not to have it —natural and forced

How much of a breeze can be created by a chimney effect during the whole day?
How much can I create by attic fans, by window fans?
How much can I create by clerestory windows at the ceiling, to take away the heat that collects up there?
How much night coolness can be captured by an intake close to the ground?
What percentage of the windows should open—in my climate?
Should my attic be sealed or ventilated?
Should the basement be closed or ventilated?
Should I be able to open up the house enough in the "dog days" so the rooms can turn into porches?
Should I keep wind off some outdoor living area so I could extend the season for outdoor living?

radiation control

reflective roofs airwash in attic porches evaporative roofs

Is summer discomfort in my climate due chiefly to high sun radiation or to high humidity? (Some places have both.)
Should I use a white roof or a reflective metal roof?
Should the walls be white or light-colored?
Should I surround the house with cool lawn or can I "get away with" paved terraces up close to the house?
Do I need shaded walls enough to have porches or awnings, even at the cost of less light indoors?
Can I keep the sun off the west wall by some device distant from the house (such as vertical louvers)?
Would it be better to have an evaporative roof in the summer time, so it could be dark-colored (and dry) for the heat value it would have in spring and fall?

basements

Can I use a partially underground room to escape the worst of weather above ground?
Is my ground temperature cool enough in summer to offer a cool retreat?
Is my summer time humidity so high I get condensation on the walls of a sunken living room, so I had better install a dehumidifier?
Is my basement the naturally warmest room in the house in winter time, so I had better make it a livable living room instead of a dark hole in the ground?

heating and cooling plants

Is it responsive enough to be combined with solar heating?
Is it adequate to heat the house at night and on cloudy or windy days in your coldest weather?
Does my climate require the steady heat of radiation or the quick off-and-on of forced warm air?
Is my hot weather long or intense enough to require full summer air conditioning?
Is there some special room that would be more useful with a room-air conditioner?

We don't talk sense —about our own comfort

WE CONFUSE OURSELVES with loose language. We say: "I am hot," "I am cold." But you are not. You are very much the same temperature summer or winter, and you have to be. If your temperature went up only a few degrees, you would die of heat prostration. If your insides were cooled a few degrees, you would die of "exposure." That's just it. In order to keep itself from getting hot, the body must work hard in summer. It sends the blood out to the surface of the body so that you are red-faced and your fingers swell up. This is a strain on the heart. Also, in order to keep yourself cool, you sweat. This is what we really mean by: "I am hot." We mean: "My body is under great strain to keep itself cool." The same in winter, only the other way 'round. "I am cold," means: "My body is making fancy adjustments to conserve its heat." The blood stays out of the feet, the ear, the nose, the fingers, which therefore become cold. You shiver. It is only an involuntary way of making your body produce more heat—a form of exercise.

Half the time you don't know what ails you. When you are hot, you may be hot for three different reasons: hot air, humid air, not enough wind. The thermometer shows only one of them.

When you are cold, you may be cold for one or all of three reasons: cold air, cold walls, drafts. Again, the thermometer shows only air temperature.

THE 3 SIMPLE CLIMATE IDEAS

Most people should know them—but few people do

A. The hot side of the house in summer is the west side.

B. Most summer discomfort comes not from hot air, but from the heated-up walls and ceilings of the building. Much winter discomfort likewise comes from cold walls, cold window panes.

C. Big windows are not wasteful even in cold climates. A window facing south will, in virtually every American climate, trap more sun-heat in winter than it lets out furnace heat. The bigger the windows, the more important it is that the heating plant be geared to the windows. The heat must go off fast when the sun comes out. It must come on fast again when the sun goes under a cloud, or when night comes. And you must have draperies to draw over the glass at night—or you'll cancel out your heat gain of the daytime. Solar windows are not practical unless your cold season is around 60% sunny. There are a few areas in the U. S. where you don't get that much sun.

Twelve important comfort facts in ANY climate

1. The temperature of the walls, floor and ceiling of a room is every bit as important as the temperature of the air.
2. Outdoor living is possible for a lot more of the year than most people realize. Very simple devices—like windbreaks, sun pockets, shade makers—can make marginal outdoor weather habitable.
3. An overhanging roof on the south side of the house shades south windows in summer, lets in sun in winter.
4. The underground is cool in summer, warm in winter. It can be harnessed to stabilize the extremes of climate above the ground.
5. Wet basements (in summer) are made wet by the moisture in the air condensing on the cold basement walls (just as a glass of ice water gets wet on the outside). Keeping the basement closed, so the moist air isn't invited to enter, is the first thing to do. Beyond that, you'll need to use a mechanical dehumidifier.
6. Our control of climate in cold weather is almost perfect. We can do anything—at a cost not too out-of-line with other costs in our times. Our control of hot weather is not so well advanced—partly because most people don't understand what summer discomfort is compounded of, and partly because, up to now, the control devices were more expensive.
7. A south slope is warm in winter, spring and fall, and not any hotter in summer. A north slope is cold in winter, spring and fall and hot in summer.
8. The air is coolest, at night, right at the ground. A low air intake, combined with an attic fan, is the best way to get cool air into the house, and to cool off the structure itself.
9. It's cooler at the bottom of a valley than on a slope. A house on the top of a slope would have warmer air, but more breeze. So whether the top is a better place to put a house depends on how humid your heat is. For the more humidity in summer, the more necessary breeze is. Breeze might be a better comfort device than a few degrees lower temperature.
10. The more humid your summer heat, the more breeze you want. The drier your heat, the less breeze you want.
11. The best natural ventilation is created by flue action—like that of your chimney. This principle is well-known, but seldom applied to improving body comfort in summer.
12. The way to begin to improve your summer comfort is to turn back sun heat before it gets into your structure. This means using a reflective roof. White colored is best, or a reflective metal surface is next best. What makes you most uncomfortable in summer, in most parts of the U. S., is not the hot air but your hot house. This is true, regardless of whether your heat is moist or dry.

EDITOR'S NOTE

You won't make head or tail of the next nine pages unless you understand three basic facts:

You are a heat-producing machine. Winter or summer, your body is always producing more heat than it needs. If it does not get rid of this excess heat fast enough, you will sicken and die. If it gets rid of this heat too fast, you will sicken and die. Thus the whole secret of your comfort, your health—even your life itself—is to lose heat at that rate which enables your body to keep an even 98.6°.

You can lose heat in any or all of four ways: by conduction (swimming), by evaporation (perspiration), by convection (breeze), by radiation (cold window). It makes no great difference which way you lose it so long as the rate of loss is right to hold that magic 98.6°.

There's no such thing as being "cool" or "warm": you only feel that way! In summer, because your environment is hotter, your rate of excess-heat loss must be increased. In winter, because it's cold, the rate must be lowered. The ordinary heating or cooling system does this mainly by convective means. That is, by bathing you in air of the right temperature, it enables your body to speed up or slow down its heat loss to the right rate. The house shown on the following pages does the same thing by mainly radiant means—that is, by surrounding you with surfaces of the right temperature.

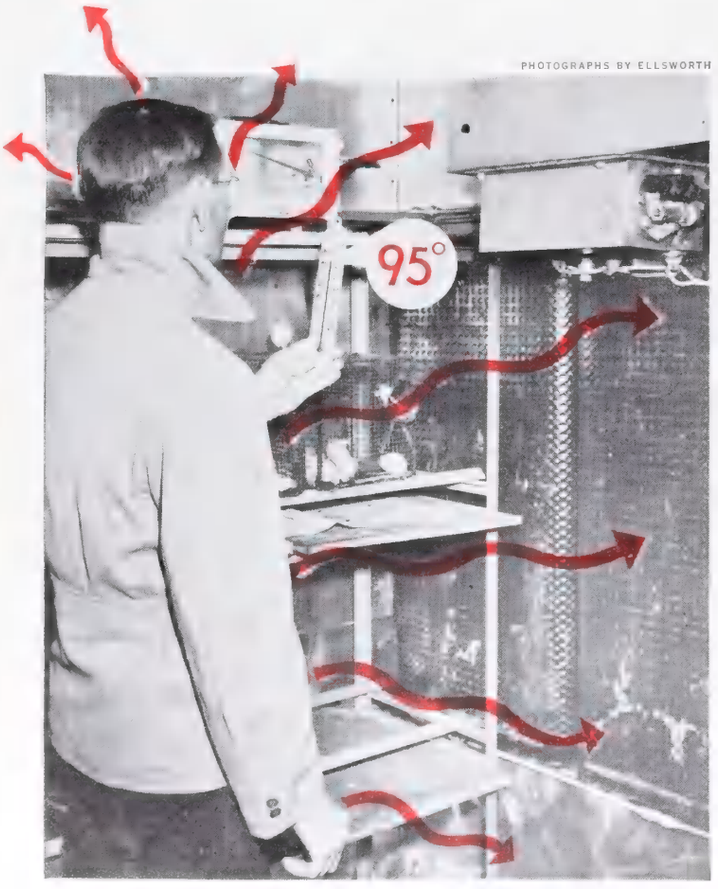
The story of the most revolutionary new house of the last 50 years

by the man who lives there



My house was in the Lab for 20 years

A medical climatologist who knows that your comfort is important to your very life tells how he built his own house—and why. See how he applies his scientific experience to his family's comfort

by Dr. Clarence A. Mills

As head of the University of Cincinnati's Laboratory for Experimental Medicine, Dr. Mills has for years been one of the leading investigators of the relation between climate, comfort, and health. A well-known, scientific author, his best-known book is, perhaps, Climate Makes the Man.

Bundled up—but comfortable—in 95° air.

In my aluminum-foil-lined laboratory, radiation keeps you cool, no matter how hot the air. The heat rays from your body are bounced around the reflective walls, floor, and ceiling until they hit cooling plates. Here they are swallowed up. Result: Animals grown here lose heat easily, are healthy, fertile.

Stripped—but comfortable—in 35° air.

The same phenomenon works in reverse. As on a snowbank on a cold sunny day, you're comfortable in this foil-lined room even with air near freezing. Heat rays from the electric heaters (left) are bounced around until they hit you. Result: Your loss of body heat is slowed down to comfortable proportions.

This is the south terrace of our new house, overlooking Cincinnati. Because the house employs reflective radiant heating and cooling, its light plywood walls have no insulation but aluminum foil. A refrigerating machine and heating coils replace furnace. Furniture is by Ficks Reed.

I built this new house because I wanted my family to enjoy the same comfort conditions that experimental animals in my laboratory have enjoyed for years. The animals thrived and so, I'm confident, shall we. The proposition is really quite simple. You and I, like all animals, are combustion machines, operating at about 25 per cent efficiency. We live off one-fourth the food we burn in our tissues, and waste the energy from the rest. The ease with which we get rid of this waste heat is a controlling factor in how vigorous, fertile, and long-lived we are. And this, in turn, means that most of us operate best in a cool climate.

My laboratory animals have a cool climate the year around, right here in the Midwest, with its hot summers and often cold winters. But they don't have air conditioning: they have reflective radiant conditioning. They are kept comfortable by losing heat, not to the air, but to the floors, walls, and ceilings around them. These surfaces take from their bodies exactly the amount of heat they need to lose, winter and summer, for their internal heat equilibrium.

In my new house we use the same system of comfort conditioning, and we like it fine. It's at least as healthy as conventional heating and cooling systems—and it is considerably simpler. All you need are reflective surfaces and a coil through which you can pass hot and cold water. It calls for a considerably lighter house structure—no massive walls, double windows, or heavy insulation. And once the system is perfected—mine is frankly experimental—it will give you year-round comfort for less than your former winter heating cost.

"Heat-and-cold mirror" is principle behind the Mills house

You have probably always thought of reflective foil as insulation—something you used instead of, or along with, the fluffy mass insulations. Well, it's that but it's something more. You can use it inside your house as a "heat-mirror." Here's the set-up: You have a room that's hard to heat and always chilly. The air in the room is not so chilly. The thermometer proves it. Yet somehow you can't get comfortable. Well, the reason is probably that the walls are too cold. They're sucking heat from your body faster than the heated air is slowing it down.

All right! Try this: Paper that cool wall with reflective foil, shiny side into the room. Right away the chill disappears, even if the air is cooler than before. The wall is no warmer to the touch, but you feel as if it were. The whole room feels warmer, because the other things in the room can no longer radiate heat at the cool wall; or rather, the heat rays are now being bounced right back into the room.

You can also cool a person with reflective foil. Put him into a room with reflective walls and ceiling. Then put a small, very cold thing into that same room—say, a refrigeration coil. He'll cool in no time, because heat rays from his skin jump to the wall, bounce perhaps to another wall, bounce up and hit the ceiling. Finally, they're bound to hit that cold thing and be swallowed up. He'll be comfortable, even though the air is warm and the foil-lined walls themselves feel warm to the touch.

That's the heat-mirror principle which Dr. Mills has employed in this house. You can see the possibilities of such reflective radiant conditioning are quite spectacular. They are only beginning to be explored in such experimental houses as this. But the time may not be far off when you'll be able to flip on instantaneous warmth or "coolth" as you enter a room and flip it off when you leave, like lights.

—The Editors

It looks this way in my laboratory . . .

To study the effect of reflective radiant conditioning on animals, I raised generations of them in foil-lined test chambers like this. No matter how air temperatures fluctuated, I kept their radiant "climate" cool. They thrived in it, were healthy, fertile, and long-lived.

. . . and this way in my home

Revolutionary! But who would guess it?

My house has refrigeration coils in the cornice and aluminum foil on the floor. Yet, like any really good design, it doesn't look bizarre

As I write these lines in my study, the city around me—Cincinnati—is sweltering in typical July heat—96° and muggy. Even in this room, the air is 88°. Yet I am comfortable, because the house is taking away my excess body heat in radiant form. The mechanism is simple. All ceilings, walls, and floors are covered with aluminum foil. This foil acts as a mirror. Heat rays from my body are reflected by this mirror up into cooling coils in the cornice. There the heat is absorbed and carried away, down to the refrigeration machine in the basement. In cold weather this process is reversed. Then heating elements take over, bouncing infra-red rays down the foil mirrors and thence to me. Either way, I'll be comfortable, no matter what the air temperature. For my house is built on the principle of reflective radiant conditioning. In cold weather it warms you by shining radiant heat on your body, thus slowing down your heat loss. In hot weather, it "cools" you by speeding up your heat radiation to surfaces cooler than yourself. The next pages show you how it's done.

Thanks to architects, designers, and engineers, my living room (top.) and dining room (bottom) look quite "normal" and pleasant with their Dunbar furniture. Yet they use the same system of reflective radiant conditioning as my laboratory, with heating and cooling coils in the cornice.

Our bedroom is a radiant-reflective box which keeps us cool in summer, warm in winter. Ceiling, walls, and floors are foil-covered. Windows are draped with a remarkable new fabric that's heat reflective, because one side is glazed with tiny particles of aluminum suspended in a plastic binder. With a pewter-like luster and the feel of soft supple satin, this fabric is permanent, dry-cleanable. Our furniture is from Heritage Henredon.

The stuff that mirrors our heat rays

You may find it hard to believe that such ordinary things as venetian blinds, draperies and "wallpapers" have that all-important aluminum surface, and are part of our conditioning system. But they are! None is shiny and metallic-looking

Aluminum blinds act as heat mirrors

Since heat rays flow in or out of a window like visible light rays, I had to be able to draw reflective curtains when necessary. Aluminum blinds and an aluminum impregnated fabric were the answer. When closed, they reflect heat rays to, or from, heating and cooling coils—almost as well as walls.

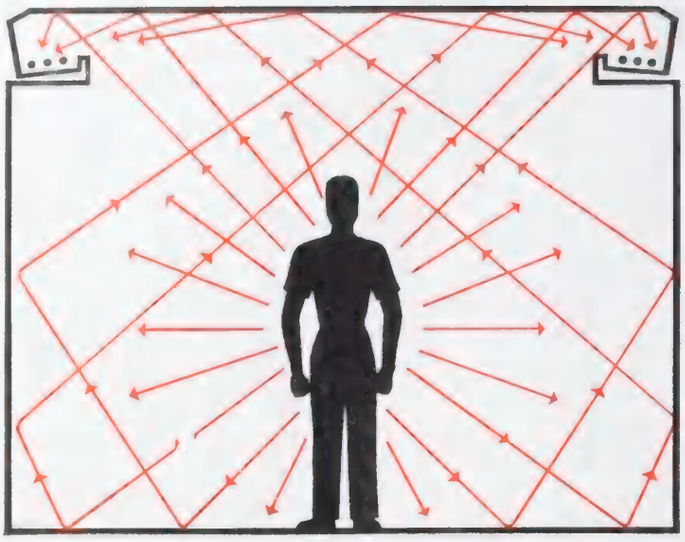
My whole house is Mirrored for comfort

The mirrors are invisible, but they're there—in wallpapers, blinds, curtains, carpets, even bedding. They're basic to my engineering

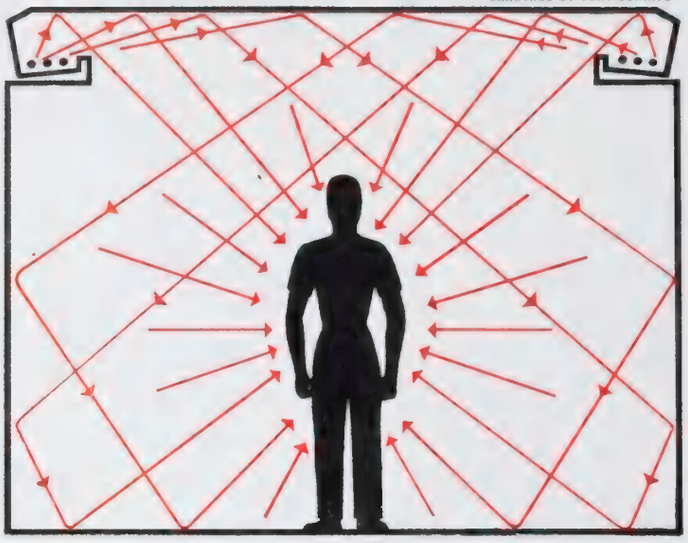
You have to remember that heat (infra-red) rays can be reflected just like visible light, but you need a special sort of mirror to do it. Aluminum is one of the best. That's why aluminum foil is such good reflective insulation. So it was clear from the start that my house had to be aluminum lined. But how to do this and not have it look like the inside of a percolator? I scoured the market for the products shown on these pages—wall papers that were reflective but still pleasant to look at, curtains and blinds that would do the job and still look well, carpets that had the right properties and still met our decorative scheme. I think the pictures prove that we mirrored our house for comfort without making it seem freakish.

"Mirrored" floors took tall doing



Foil is reflective only in open air. Thus I had to hold nylon carpet away from foil-lined floors. Solution was rubber matting with waffle-like surface. I used nylon carpeting because it's largely transparent to heat rays.

We need no bulky bed-covering

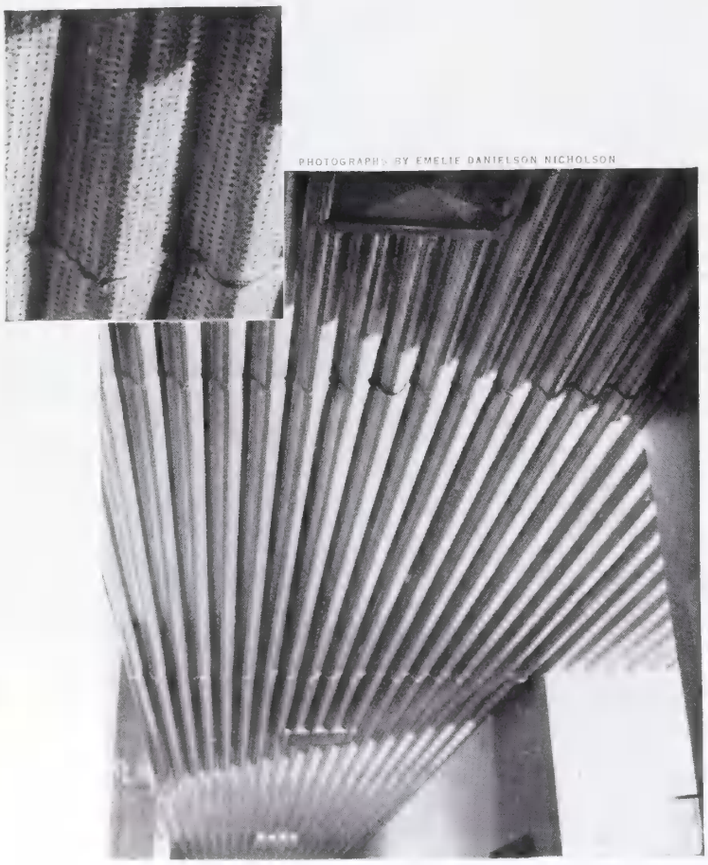


This translucent nylon "blanket" is as warm as one ten times its weight—thanks to the very thin glaze of plastic-suspended aluminum particles on the underside. It reflects our body heat back at us to keep us warm.

DRAWINGS BY TONY SCHIAVO

Heat flows away; you're "cool"

In summer, my house is comfortable because its reflective surfaces bounce heat rays from your body into the cooling troughs around the ceiling. This makes you feel cool, whatever the air temperature, because you're losing excess heat at the right rate.

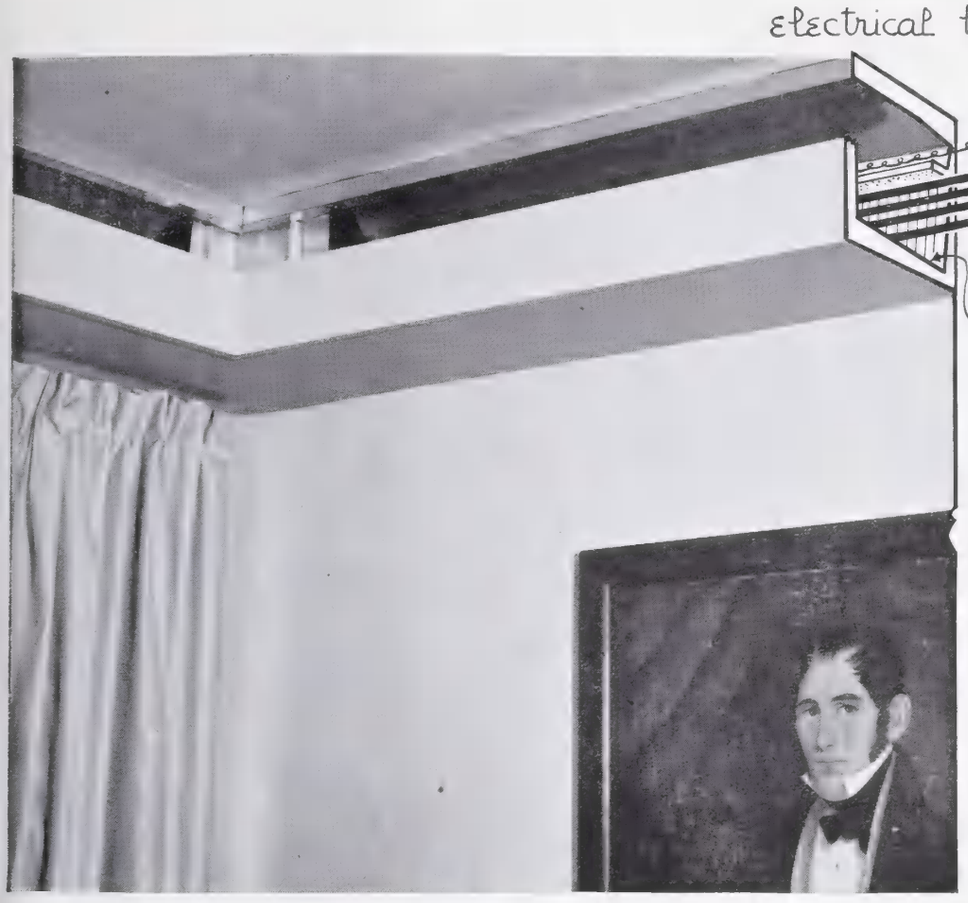


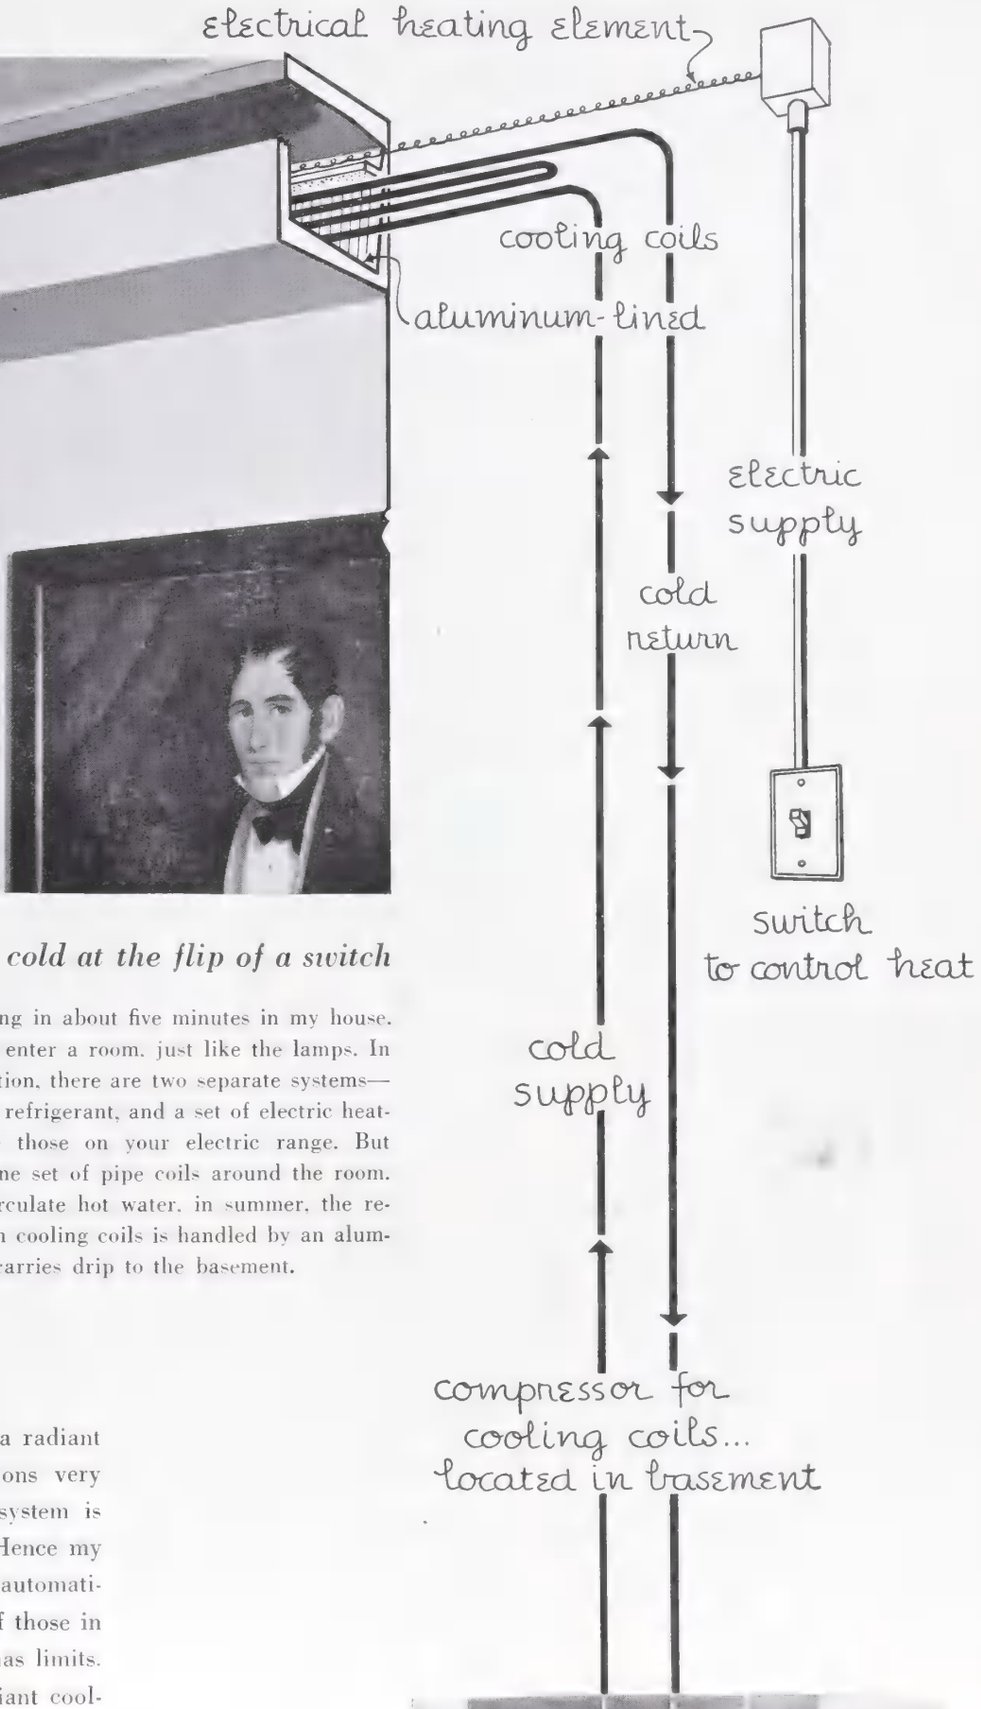
Heat flows to you; you're "warm"

In winter, you feel comfortably warm because heat rays from the electric heating elements are being reflected at you from every angle. This slows down your rate of body heat loss so that, even in cold air, your internal heat equilibrium is maintained.

The heart of my comfort system is in the ceiling

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EMELIE DANIELSON NICHOLSON



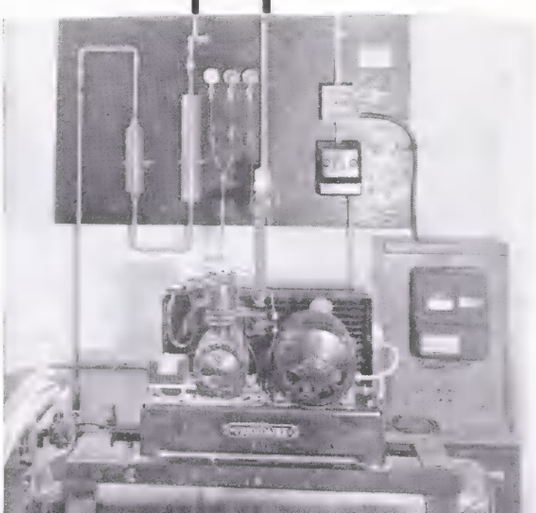


Air pressure keeps our house dust-free

Electrically-filtered air sifts down from perforated aluminum ceiling of central hall. By keeping a slightly higher atmospheric pressure inside the house than out, this clean air prevents dust and soot from sifting into our house.

You are already familiar with indirect lighting coves or troughs. You see them everywhere, in shops, cafes, houses. Well, the troughs in my house work the same way except that, instead of diffusing visible light rays, they handle invisible heat rays. In winter, their heating coils radiate heat rays which are reflected around the foil-lined walls of the room so that they hit you from every angle, just like light rays in a brightly lit room. In summer, the process is reversed. Then your body may be compared to the heating element giving off the heat rays. These rays are bounced around the room surfaces until they ultimately hit the cooling coils in the troughs. Circulating a cold liquid in these coils absorbs this heat and carries it away.

Thus, in my house, your comfort is maintained exclusively by radiant means, without the necessity of ever heating or cooling the air. You feel "cooled" or "warmed" because your rate of heat loss is exactly right for the weather—neither too much nor too little.



Hot or cold at the flip of a switch

We have heating or cooling in about five minutes in my house. You turn it on when you enter a room, just like the lamps. In this experimental installation, there are two separate systems—a set of coils carrying the refrigerant, and a set of electric heating elements rather like those on your electric range. But ideally, all you need is one set of pipe coils around the room. In winter these would circulate hot water, in summer, the refrigerant. Condensation on cooling coils is handled by an aluminum-lined gutter which carries drip to the basement.

Since heat rays travel with the speed of light, a radiant system like mine can give you comfort conditions very quickly. But once you're in the room and the system is working, it has to be modulated like any other. Hence my house has a series of thermostatic controls which automatically adjust the heating or cooling to the needs of those in the room. Of course, my system, like any other, has limits. I estimate that my living room has adequate radiant cooling capacity for twelve people on a hot night. Beyond that, I'd have to add cooling coils or use fans.

People ask me if, in Cincinnati's humid summers, my walls don't sweat, like an ice-tea glass. The answer is no, because—oddly enough—the walls themselves never get cold. They stay pretty near room-air temperature while directing heat rays to the cooling coils. This you may find hard to believe. But it's an old fact from the physics book—the surface temperature of a reflective material is not affected by the heat rays that it reflects.

Lighting was quite a problem in my kitchen, because any radiant heat source affects comfort of occupants. Solution: Fluorescent lamps add minimum heat in summer; in winter, heat from incandescent light bulbs is actually utilized.

—I'm so busy." I wanted to get the turkey out to the guests as soon as possible and I was in no mood for promises.

"Please, Mother—may we please have a curry if there's any turkey left?" She was so earnest about it that it made me pause, and, right in the middle of all the fuzz-buzz of the party, I realized that I'd been missing a big point. Here was a luscious-looking turkey, but to Susie it was a curry.

"Of course, dear, we'll have curry, and I'm sure there will be enough turkey left," I said. Susie left, completely happy, with me puzzling over why I was so dumb about really planning and organizing my food program.

I had always been discouraged when I opened the ice box and looked in at the dibs and dabs of this and that. My reaction was solely, "Oh, how dull and dreary!" But now that I've got onto a basic fact, I look at them as a miser gloats over his hoard of gold, for they are definitely an opportunity and, what is most important, they are distinctly energy-savers in the preparation of future meals. My changed point of view is taking me into a new world that, in 20 years, experts will probably call by some high falutin' name like "Quantum Cookery." For now I deliberately cook too much, so I will have some left over—in fact, a lot left over.

BUT first, let me tell you my theories about the care of previously cooked foods. Allow them to cool slowly at room temperature after loosely covering them with wax paper. Putting warm food into a cold refrigerator spoils its flavor somehow. Before you tuck yourself in bed, tuck the room-temperature foods into the refrigerator. Before putting a roast into the refrigerator, put it (platter or roaster and all) into an airtight nylon or polyethylene bag. Twist the end of the bag and tuck it under the platter to keep the air out. I have kept meats moist and fresh for over a week in these containers. I don't recommend your keeping meat this long, but I did it just to experiment.

The reason I store roasts on the platter or in the roaster is to save all the juices, so when I make a sauce I use all the juices in the platter. Besides, it saves just that much dish-washing.

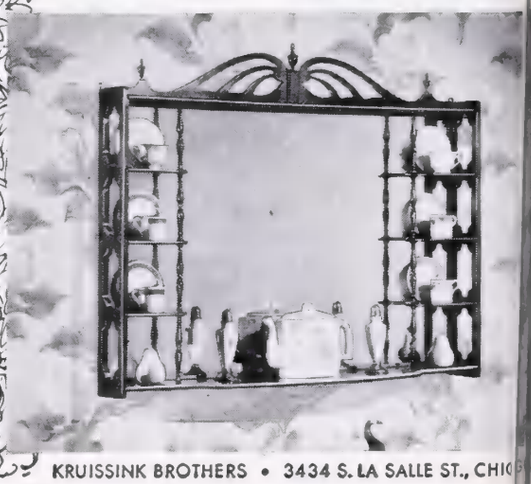
Vegetables should be stored in tightly covered containers to keep them fresh and sparkling. I don't ever reheat vegetables, as they seem to sag and lose their zest. Neither do I believe in adding newly cooked vegetables, such as putting previously cooked carrots with newly cooked peas. The only vegetable I have found that reheats successfully is corn.

But there are so many ways to use these cooked vegetables that it is fun to try all sorts of ways. Of course, salad is one fun way of using cooked vegetables—pepping them up with an exciting salad dressing. Cooked asparagus with a vinaigrette dressing is a good first course, or broccoli fixed the same way. Celery Victor is also delicious.

THE way I like best to use cooked vegetables is to whizz them in the electric blender with chicken or beef consommé or milk to make a delicious hot or cold soup. Green peas whizzed with the chicken broth are dreamy. Chinese peas with a touch of cumin seed, blended in beef consommé, are a taste tantalizer. Spinach with green onion and minced garlic, whizzed in milk, is an eye-appealing, cool-looking soup when served cold. Or it is just as attractive served hot. So just go into a trance and dream up a new dish with some of your leftover vegetables, and you will have fun inventing some new dish.

There are four or five ways of glamorizing roasts. For years, when we had a roast of beef, I would serve the family cold sliced beef, baked potatoes, and salad. If we had ham, the next night we would have cold sliced ham, macaroni and cheese casserole, and salad. Cold sliced turkey and hot spaghetti. This was the easy way to use cold meats, but not very imaginative. Everybody in the house knew, with an inescapable finality, what the unraveling of the plot would be, especially after a big party.



There are five ways that I use previously cooked meats. Of course, the most glamorous dish is curry. It is certainly by all odds the favorite with our family. Melt some butter in a stainless steel frying pan, add a teaspoon of curry powder and a heaping teaspoon of brown sugar, stir with a wooden spoon until melted. Add the blended, enriched broth made from the gravy and drippings. Add whatever meat you have: bite-size chunks of turkey, chicken, seafood, lamb, or beef.

We serve this curry dish not only for the family but for small and large parties, for it is so simple to do. The work is all done one or two days before. No one would ever recognize it as a leftover. (Editor's note: Look up Mrs. Stanton's own curry recipe in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, September 1949, or consult any basic cookbook.)

The next most favorite handling of leftovers in our house is via sour cream. It is a wonderful medium for making a superb sauce. In thinking about the grilled chicken we had left over from Friday night's party, I know that for Sunday lunch I'll have chicken in sour cream. Before we were grilling those chickens at the party I boiled the necks, gizzards, and hearts with carrots, onions, and celery. So on Sunday morning I take the grilled chicken out of its airtight nylon bag, arrange it in a casserole, pour over the chicken stock (with or without vegetables whizzed in, as you prefer), and add a half-pint of sour cream. It is a delicious dish and it's definitely acceptable enough to serve guests. Veal roast is also delicious cubed and put in a sour cream sauce. Lamb is equally good. There is even a whole book on sour cream cookery, so I won't go into detail here. (Editor's Note: It is called Sour Cream Cookery by Barbara Brown, published by Barrows.)

THEN there's stew. If you have had a pot roast or a rib roast, and there is quite a bit left, a stew is an obvious solution—too obvious really. But lots of people don't do right by stews. They cook the meat again—which makes it too pulpy and soft and unpleasant. Meat should not be cooked again, but just heated in the gravy. Cut the vegetables you want to add into large chunks and cook with the bones in canned consommé for an hour. To vary the flavor, use red wine. A rather intriguing flavor can be achieved once in a while with rye bread crumbs with caraway seeds. This thickens the sauce as well.

I have three other tricks up my sleeve—all borrowed from the cuisines of other countries: Sweden, Armenia, and China. As a matter of fact, many foreign methods are often extremely useful in "making a little stretch to a lot," for other countries have not been blessed with the abundance we have in America, and the whole history

EVERY window box in town doesn't have to look exactly like every other one. Why use the same old plants in the same old ways that everyone else has done for generations? Why not experiment? You can make your window gardens express your own personality.

If your house is small, you won't want to hide it behind a jungle. But, if the situation calls for a bold effect (like camellias or castor beans), don't settle for dainty wisps. The texture—size, shape, and "feel" of the leaves—is just as important as the size and shape of the plants. Thick, glossy-leaved plants like hollies look well against brick or stone, soft-leaved plants like petunias with clapboards or shingles.

Pick your plants with care. If your window is shaded most of the day, don't use plants like geraniums that need sun. Use tuberous begonias instead. Or, if your window is sunny, use plants like California poppies, petunias, marigolds, or ice plants. If you need a trailing plant, use inchplant, variegated euonymous, German ivy, vinca, or creeping fig.

I WONDER how S. S. Pierce Company's superb Cherries Jubilee escaped my eagle eye till now. I was amazed to learn that their pantry-shelf edition of this celebrated epicurean dessert had been on the horizon for almost a year before I discovered it. But an innovation like this is worthy of top billing any time.

The pantry shelf never had a more illustrious resident than this pet of gourmets the world over. As those who have partaken of the luscious, flambéed delicacy in some famed restaurant or elsewhere know, it richly merits the plaudits of its devotees. There's a special something about its rich flavor and the festive glamour created by the diminutive flames that float over the purple-hued "pool" of sauce and cherries, that gives this basically simple delicacy such elegance that it's become synonymous with gala occasions and epicurean dining. It delights both the palate and the eye. The origin of the name Cherries Jubilee has always been something of a mystery. It is believed by many that the renowned chef, Francarelli, renamed cherries-flambéed-in-kirsh "Cherries Jubilee" in honor of England's Jubilee of 1897.

In case you haven't made its acquaintance ere now, Cherries Jubilee is made of pitted Bing cherries, poached in simple syrup, thickened just enough to give the sauce a velvety texture, then dressed with kirsh, ignited, and served forth in all its blazing glory. Some serve it without further embellishment; some over vanilla ice-cream. While not traditional or so gala, it's a delectable everyday dessert served chilled, without flambée, with or without ice-cream.

In creating their pantry-shelf edition of Cherries Jubilee, Pierce have deviated from the recipe found in Escoffier and other famous cookbooks, in one respect. Instead of kirsh, which in their opinion is overpowered by the strident flavor of the cherries, they use claret subtly laced with rum. We're with them every inch of the way in the merit of this substitution. The claret and cherries are so evenly matched and so right for each other that the two merge to create a blend that's real perfection.

To serve Pierce's Epicure Cherries Jubilee, you simply empty the contents of the jar into a chafing dish or heat-proof bowl, float it with a spoonful of ignited brandy, and ladle the flaming mixture into waiting serving dishes. Whether you serve Epicure Cherries Jubilee flambéed or chilled, solo, or on ice-cream, we predict it will become a high-ranking favorite in your dessert repertoire. Three 8-oz. jars cost $2.25 (plus postage) from S. S. Pierce Co., Boston 17, Mass.

In a nut-shell, the unique device utilizes the natural travel of meat juices from the inside out in the presence of heat, to diffuse liquefied flavorings and seasonings through the length and breadth of the roast, fowl or fish, and into the very tissue of the meat itself.

Except for the four-inch, sharpened tubular needle at the head of its aluminum barrel, Savorizer resembles a pastry-decorating gun. The plunger end of the Savorizer draws the liquid infusion into the barrel (instructions come with the device explaining the simple method of making a liquid infusion of garlic, onion, monosodium glutamate, tenderizers, spices, herbs, etc.), and then squirts the infusion into the meat under high pressure. As the meat juices travel outward during roasting or broiling, they pick up the flavoring or seasoning and carry it along with them on their circuit.

The results achieved by this technique are incredible—especially with the use of meat-tenderizers and monosodium-glutamate flavor intensifiers.

Another area where Savorizer opens new and exciting vistas is in infusing basting liquids. What a difference between this and the conventional basting method! Orange juice, for instance, when you're roasting a duck; orange, pineapple, or any other juice you fancy, along with wine, clove, and brown sugar, are diffused right into a ham; barbecue sauce becomes part and parcel of the meat you wish barbecued. Besides all this, you are able, with any roasting or broiling, to draw up pan juices and their flavorings and redirect them into the meat. You'll be amazed at how much this adds to their succulence and flavor. And the service the remarkable device can render in enhancing the flavor and tenderness of inexpensive meat cuts is well worth noting, too.

Savorizer utilizes the same spices, leafed herbs, powdered seasoners and flavorings, clove garlic, raw onion, etc. that you normally use. Converting any of them into a liquid infusion takes less than five minutes and requires no equipment except a small saucepan. Dispensing the infusion into the meat is as easy as ABC. The flavoring and seasoning tricks Savorizer can perform are endless. It's great fun trying out various combinations. For instance, you can infuse turkey with "smoke"; flavor fish with clam juice (a delicious flavor blend), etc.

The Savorizer went through many months of intensive tests before its debut. It is winning glowing tributes from hotel and restaurant chefs, and I'm sure you'll be equally lavish in your praise when it makes its debut into your own kitchen. It's a truly noteworthy innovation. $2.50, from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York.

A browsing tour of C. Henderson's unusual shop, with its well-informed proprietor as your tour guide, is like making a brief gastronomical tour of the world. Though they specialize in unusual imports from India and China, virtually every country of the world is represented in this array of rare and unusual foods.

There's such an abundance to choose from, and they're all so exceptional, that it's mighty hard to narrow one's interest to a few. I finally settled on a group of sauces, from India and China, that are as versatile as they're exotic.

The star of them all, to my way of thinking (and apparently my enthusiasm for it is shared by all those who know it), is Lingham's Chilly Sauce, imported from British Malaysia. When it first contacts your palate, you're aware only of its delightfully piquant taste. But a split second later, its high chilies content springs to the fore and manifests itself in no uncertain terms. The merger of its "fire" and sweet-relish-like flavor is a masterpiece of blending. Peppery as can be, but without "scorch," and a rich, scintillating flavor that has to be tasted to be appreciated, its content is only chilies, grape vinegar, and sugar, but it's the superb blending skill behind it that really matters. The thick, reddish sauce makes a delightful, zesty "dunk" for shrimp or a cocktail dressing for oysters; it's equally good on roast beef, steaks, chops, and game. A spot of it in gravy, soup, salad dressing, or cheese, gives them a wondrous fillip.

My second find is Lee Mui Lam Chinese Duck Sauce, made in Hong Kong. Though I believe its true name is "plum sauce," it's so traditional for dressing duck that it's come to be called duck sauce. You'll find it in that guise, as well as on egg-rolls and other Chinese cuisine in all Chinese restaurants. They don't use lamb, but in your own use of duck sauce, don't overlook the delectable manner in which this plum sauce blends with the flavor of roast lamb. The yellowish-green mixture of plums, garlic, and red chili is thick as apple sauce with a mere breath of pepperiness and a garlic undertone that adds a perfect touch to the flavor of the plums. The only sweetness in it is contributed by the plums themselves.

Indian Prawn Balchow is the fieriest member of the trio. Hot as all get-out but as superb an Indian sauce as you'll find anywhere. It's traditionally used as a "side dish" or condiment for curries. But it met with high favor when I served it as a shrimp "dunk," especially with the menfolks. Like the Chilly Sauce, a dash of it used as a flavoring makes a zesty pick-up for any food to which you want to give a peppery sparkle. It's made of ground prawns, chilies, curry powder, garlic, mustard oil, and vinegar. You can see where it gets its fire! It tastes much like a peppery Worcestershire sauce laced with a mustard undertone. The sauce is thick with ground prawn. Having got into the curry realm, I couldn't help but take note of two other curry adjuncts in the Henderson galaxy that I thought you'd like to know about. One is a 2¼-ounce pack, in a tin box, of Bombay Duck. This traditional curry condiment is much in demand but becomes something of a problem if it's not used up at one sitting. While it's dubbed Bombay Duck, it's actually dried Bommaloe Fish. The salty, highly scented (shall we say) fish is virtually unstorable without passing its aroma on to other foods. This miniature pack solves this problem perfectly for there's just enough in it to take care of one curry party.

The second curry adjunct is Javin Pappadums (or Papads, as they're sometimes called). They're spicy, peppery wafers made from an Old Madras recipe. They're like little, paper-thin pancakes that look much like tortillas, which you toast or deep-fry for serving. On first nibble, the wafer tastes like a tortilla but momentarily its peppery zest comes at you full steam ahead. They're right up the menfolk's alley as a cocktail snack. Their traditional use, of course, is as an accompaniment to curries. They make zesty nibbling, however you use them; just hot enough to add tang to salads or drink.

The Lingham's Chilly Sauce costs $1.60 for a 12-oz. bottle; duck sauce, $1.25 for a 1-lb. can; Indian Prawn Balchow is also $2.25, for a 1-lb. bottle. Either Bombay Duck or Pappadums (6-oz. tin) cost $1.50. All plus postage from C. Henderson's, 22 East 55th Street, New York, N. Y.

SULLIVAN AND GILBERT

good fortune to possess an "and" to connect them with a Gilbert.

Possibly to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Sullivan's death, a new book has just been published. It is called The World of Gilbert and Sullivan, written by W. A. Darlington, who is the drama critic of the London Daily Telegram. The book has an introduction by Brooks Atkinson, the drama critic of The New York Times, himself a Gilbert and Sullivan fan. The purpose of the book is to set before us the background of the world of the two men and to elucidate some of the satirical allusions which the years have made obscure. What, for example, is a "pocket borough," by which Sir Joseph, in Pinafore, was sent into Parliament? Who is Captain Shaw, of whom the Fairy Queen sings in Iolanthe? Who or what is being satirized in Patience? Read Mr. Darlington and find out.

His book is neither the first, nor will it be the last commentary on the Savoy operettas and their creators. Nor is it the best book on the subject, though the two men were such interesting personalities that no such book is a total loss, and this particular book makes several fresh points. I prefer, however, the recent biography by Hesketh Pearson, Gilbert and Sullivan, or the more comprehensive and learned book by Isaac Goldberg, The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan, which unfortunately is now out of print and hard to find.

PERHAPS the best book about Gilbert and Sullivan is by Gilbert and Sullivan; I refer to A Treasury of Gilbert and Sullivan. This volume, which is enhanced by the illustrations of Lucille Corcos, presents many of the songs in versions that can be played and sung at home. Such books are published because, as Mr. Darlington says, "Never in the history of the theaters of the world has there been anything to match the continued popularity of Gilbert and Sullivan opera."

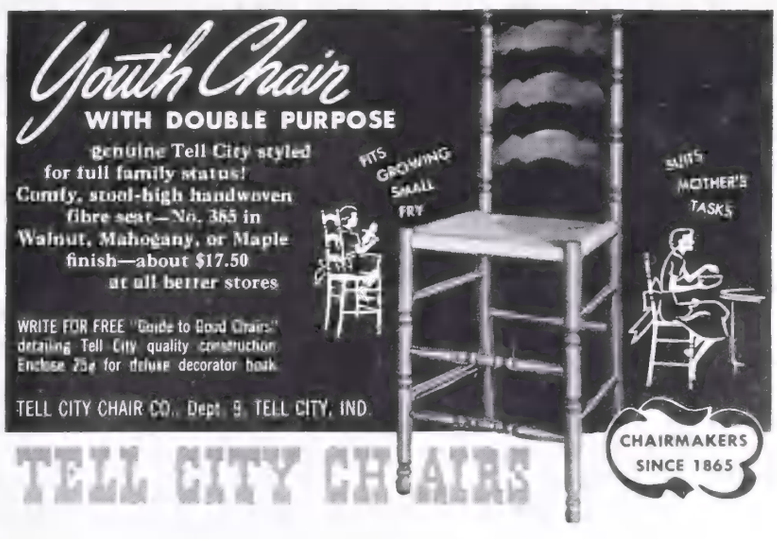
avoid frustration, too, because storage space for tools and utensils is provided near work space where they are to be used. There is no question of hunting all over the place for the bread knife or the rolling pin or the sauce pan. As far as possible, storage space is near eye level, eliminating a great deal of bending, stooping, and reaching into dark recesses.

THE new cabinets shown in these pages are the result of a careful re-study of what makes a kitchen convenient and efficient. The designer, Michael Hallward, is himself something of a chef, and has first-hand experience to point the way to the ideal kitchen. His practical analysis of what today's housewife demands in greater convenience has been translated by Frank C. Snedaker & Company into these "Glamour Kitchens."

Cabinets are of wood in a choice of seven stock colors, with Formica counters in nine colors. Thus a wide variety of color schemes is available. All doors slide open and shut, thus avoiding the danger of banged heads. Some slide from side to side; others roll up and down, tambour style, like the old roll-top desk.

Work surfaces are of three different heights, according to the purpose they serve. Standard 36" height holds for most counters. At the baking center, a 33" height is found more convenient. And the snack bar or counter is 30" high. Base cabinets are designed with knee space, so one can sit down to do the chores.

Wall cabinets are 13" deep at the bottom, 14" at the top. The resulting front slant is another safeguard against bumped heads.



"Glamour Kitchens" include a new kind of in-between size unit (only 6½" deep and 15" high, with tambour doors) intended to go between base and wall cabinets for spices, seasonings, and similar things that come in small packages and are used at the work counters.

Another unusual cabinet, known as the "split" cabinet, is a wall unit designed to hold everything needed for the making of a salad. It is "split" because, in addition to the regular shelves, the door is shelved, too, and equipped with a clamp to hold a salad bowl.

Pots and pans in "Glamour Kitchens" are in clear view, easy to reach, and need not be stacked. A stainless steel liner in an eye-level cabinet is perforated to hold hooks that permit you to hang pots and pans, even spatulas, strainers and the like, in accordance with your personal habits and the size of the different utensils. Baking tins stand on end in their own files.

IN dimensioning shelves, proper regard has been paid to standard-size food packages. Shelves for cereals in the over-range cabinet are tall because most cereals come in tall boxes. The under-sink shelf for the variety of soap flakes, detergents, and cleaners in use in the average kitchen is tall and wide enough for the biggest package. This shelf, incidentally, is removable for access to plumbing—an appreciated, practical arrangement.

In other words, all kinds of things made by the people and intended for their own use and enjoyment.

Since the coming of the machine age and the decline of the crafts, we have come to draw an unnecessarily sharp line between the art of designing useful objects, and the "fine arts" of sculpture and painting. But during the great period of American folk art for most of our people this distinction was not so important. Silversmiths like Paul Revere were also engravers; potters, ship painters, and sign painters also did decorative painting or portraits; shipwrights, blacksmiths, and iron molders tried their hands at sculpture. Some of the most important early American artists, like the versatile Charles Willson Peale, started out as saddlers, glaziers, or clockmakers. Thus a fine iron utensil might have as much artistic importance as an early painting while the painting might be of equal significance in foreshadowing our contemporary design.

Nor is folk art necessarily primitive, or provincial, or untaught. The real distinction between folk art and fine art is that folk art does not come out of an academic tradition passed on by schools. Instead, it comes out of a craft tradition passed on in the shop from father to son, from master to apprentice. It is not the work of professional artists but of trained craftsmen and artisans as well as some untrained groups of average citizens. Folk artists may be amateurs with some training, amateurs who were self-taught, amateurs and occasional artists with no training whatever—including sailors, farmers, housewives, cowboys, lumberjacks, and even businessmen.

Delicate linear designs like this bird were common on 19th-century stoneware crocks. Index of American Design

Among the gifted amateurs with ome training were the girls who tudied art as an "elegant accom-lishment" in the "female semi-aries" which sprang up in great umber in this country after the Revolution. Their contribution to American still-life painting and ecorative design has never been ully appreciated.

What are the distinguishing ualities that we find in the work f this assemblage of average citi-ens? European scholars have told s more than once that American alent has done no more than re-eat the forms bequeathed it by s multiple European ancestry. Many Americans have come to be-ieve it. But all our experience ells us this is not so. As we have aid, all folk art tends to show a ong memory back into the past. nd ours differs only in what it as chosen to remember. The craft-hop tradition is unbelievably tena-ious, and thus we see elements, vhich have disappeared out of European art for half a millen-ium or more, reappearing in American folk art quite casually.

In the Museum of Modern Art n New York, there is a magnifi-ent carved wood eagle which ears a close family resemblance o the carvings on Romanesque hurches of the Twelfth Century. But the fact seems to be that it as made in the Nineteenth Cen-ury as a sign for a tavern in Paw-ucket, Rhode Island. Look at the oble horse in the photograph on age 138. It is unmistakably eir to the tradition of the horses f St. Mark's in Venice, which in urn go back to Nero's arch in ome, and ultimately look back o the proud and happy horses of reek antiquity. But this horse is n American cast-iron weather ane found in Boston. In my own collection is a large wooden toy horse with a curious Chinese look, relating it to the fine sculptures of the period between 200 B.C. and 600 A.D. It was the work of a toy carver of Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, and how he learned to carve with such distinction is one of the mysteries of folk art.

All of these strange throwbacks have come out of the slow evolution of folk memory, but they have also come out of the American craftsmanship of their time and have filled the needs of the time and place in which they appeared. They indicate the inevitable continuity of the present with the past and show that it occurs even when the artist does not consciously repeat or borrow from old forms.

But while folk art has a long memory, it also looks ahead. Its forward look has been demonstrated time and again in its contributions to new styles. There was folk art in ancient Athens and Rome, and it played a significant role in the transition from late classical to early Christian art. Again, folk art has contributed to the great Flemish art of the Fifteenth Century. For the forward look of American folk art—the "go ahead" spirit which it has passed on to us—we have only to refer to early American tools, implements, and utensils, and to the community arts of such groups as the Shakers.

One of the most prominent characteristics of early American craftsmen and artisans was their talent for adaptation. It cannot be denied that they borrowed freely from other cultures. But their borrowing is not to be frowned upon. In fact, one of the signs of a vital art is the ability to assimilate the work of others.

From the beginning of our creative history, however, we have seldom used forms as we have received them. We have done something with them, and to them. That something has not been capricious and it has not been stimulated by a demand for mere novelty, though a liking for the new is strong in us. As an active people facing the demands and opportunities of a new land, we have used what we had to make what we needed, taking the old forms as a springboard for invention, and shaping what we inherited from the European past to our new environment.

THIS sort of adaptation has taken place everywhere in the world throughout history. In the older countries the process has been slow, following waves of taste which have lasted over long periods. With us, through the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Centuries, the trends have had a shorter wave length. But through all the changes there has been a certain stability of selection.

This process of reshaping is nowhere better illustrated than in the folk arts of the Shakers. The first Shakers were English immigrants. Their design in its beginnings may be traced to English sources. But they made converts from every section of the American population and, as their communities grew in the Nineteenth Century, their community arts developed into something unique.

Their piety of plain form worked always toward the greatest simplicity and usefulness. They used the wood and stone and weaving fibers which they found in their own localities, and handled these materials with an honesty and straightforwardness which has not been surpassed. They were prolific gadgeteers and used the most modern techniques. Their sense of fitness and function, and their inventiveness in architecture and architectural fittings, in improving the design of tools and utensils, cooling systems for storage, drying systems for laundries, furniture and built in furniture, give them a high place among the distinguished ancestors of the American Style of today.

Not only the crafts of the Shakers, but all of our folk art ha always tended toward simplicity. This is in the very grain of the American tradition. Colonists and pioneers, making their way into a wilderness, had to travel light. For the most part they were plain-clothes people. With many of them —Puritans, Quakers, Moravians, the various Mennonite groups, and others—plainness was piety as well as principle. Their garments and dwellings were plain. Their churches and meeting houses were austere to the point of bareness.

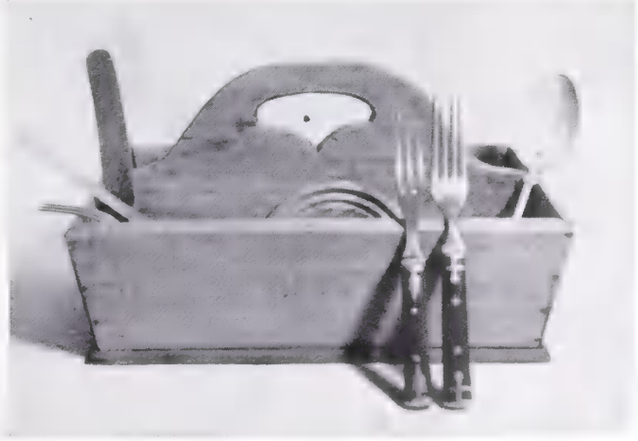
So it is not surprising that the objects of everyday use they made for themselves, their tools and implements, had to be simple and useful. Here we find another characteristic of our folk art—its insistence on usefulness. We see it in the pioneer hoes, and in barley forks such as the beautiful examples on this page. We see it in the cast-iron plows; the unique, light, and beautifully balanced American ax; the Conestoga wagon; and the "Kentucky" rifle (actually made on the Pennsylvania frontier), which was not only a more accurate weapon than any of its European prototypes, but more graceful in design, better balanced, easier to load, and lighter for the hunters to carry because of its smaller bore requiring lighter ammunition.

Insistence on usefulness was a characteristic of our folk art. Barley fork from N. Y. State Historical Association.



These articles of everyday use are examples of American folk art which is not conscious of itself as art. In it we find the strains which still motivate American design—the strains of simplicity, fitness to purpose, honest use of materials, invention, the creativeness that reshapes inherited forms in response to the demands of a changed environment, and the influence of one tradition upon another. This is the legacy that has shaped our contemporary American style.

The practitioners of no style think of themselves as followers or forerunners. The current style always seems to be an end in itself. Only in the long view do we see that it can be both an end and a beginning. Students of American design are prone to forget this and to see the contemporary development as something unique in the world.

We are forever being assured that our art is now at last emerging or "coming of age." But American art has emerged a good many times. It had a pretty solid emergence in the portraits and Puritan handicrafts of the 1670's. It was certainly "of age" a hundred years later when it produced painters like Robert Feke and John

Take It Easy, Lady!

Take advantage of new labor-saving equipment and improvements in old, and you won't be a slave to housework

by Charlotte Conway

Small kitchens and small families go together. But even if the size of both is limited, there's room for a breakfast table when it's only 22″ x 30″ big. Howell's drop-leaf table can be made bigger than this by raising one or both of the drop leaves. When both are up, table measures 30″ x 49″. It is so designed that chairs can slide under and out of the way when not in use. Table top is Formica, in an assortment of colors, matched by Fabrilite upholstery on the chairs. Upholstery will take a lot of punishment, resists scratching and scuffing, practically any kind of soil. It cleans easily with a damp, soapy cloth. Legs on table and chairs are sturdy Chromsteel.

And when you come to a big family, Boy, you need lots of food, and lots of refrigerator space to keep it fresh! Frigidaire now makes a great big 17 cu. ft. refrigerator, with two doors. To accommodate it, you need a space about 67″ high, 39″ wide, and 35″ deep, plus enough room to open the doors. With this, you get a freezer space big enough to hold 56 lbs. of frozen food, 4 single- and 1 double-width Quickube ice trays (12 lbs. of cubes), two glass-topped porcelain hydrators for crisping vegetables, and a generously-sized glass low-cold storage drawer for meat or an extra supply of ice cubes.

To keep your laundry lint-and-moisture-free when you're lucky enough to have an automatic clothes dryer, Hamliton has brought out venting accessories adapted to any Hamilton installation. The laundry may be in the basement, kitchen, or first-floor utility room. But wherever it is, the new venting accessories will fit. They can be installed by your plumber, or by the man of the house, if he is handy with tools. Clear diagrams and detailed instructions come with vents.

DRAWINGS BY KELLY OECHSLI

Need a portable room heater, a warming tray, or a small cook stove? You can get them all in one easy-to-carry appliance, known as the Hot-ray Heater. With radiant glass panel in horizontal position, you switch it to HIGH to cook hamburgers, franks, fried eggs. Or switch it to LOW to keep hot food hot for hours (elegant for hot hors d'oeuvres). Or tip up the panel to warm up a room on chilly days. Tilting glass panel is bound in aluminum, mounted on a good-looking frame. It's shatterproof, won't burn if touched accidentally.

You'd never suspect it, but that exact spot where Madame is whipping up a cake is the top of a freezer. International Harvester makes it with a top as flat as your kitchen counter, to make extra work space between cabinets. It holds a lot of frozen food, too, a good 245 lbs. of it. (If you're cu. ft. minded, count on 7 cu. ft. capacity.) 36″ high, it's 44¼″ wide and 27¼″ deep. Allow 61½″ from the floor to clear top when open. You need not worry about condensation dripping on floor, for dri-wall coils keep exterior moisture-free.

Wasted corners are not to be tolerated in any kitchen, but especially in a small one. American Central has invented a new corner utility bin to fit in with the regular assembly of their kitchen cabinets. The bin is ventilated, and will hold a surprising amount of food, as much as 20 lbs. of potatoes. Bin fronts come in three sizes, 6″, 9″, and 12″, to fit any imaginable dimension need. Bin itself slides on nylon glides, pulls out for cleaning with the greatest of ease. Some resourceful people find the bin extremely useful for trays.

Now you really can walk away from wash day, and with a clear conscience! Altorfer Bros. Co. has a new automatic A-B-C-O-Matic washer, and here's how you use it. Put in the clothes, add soap, set the dials, and walk away. Set one dial for water temperature, other for complete washing cycle. Machine washes, rinses 3 times, spins clothes ironing-dry. Aluminum agitator with rubber fins pulsates outward and inward in "centric agitation" to flex each article, prevent tangling. Automatic levelers adjust to uneven floors.

CURTIS WOODWORK

What's the difference between Curtis Woodwork and just ordinary woodwork? Much of the difference is in design—the correct proportions and finely finished details that make Curtis Woodwork a life-long joy. This good design—plus expert workmanship and choice materials—may be yours, without added cost, when you build or remodel. This beautiful mantel, for instance (Curtis design C-6063), was adapted by a famous architect from an 18th century original. It's one of many designs.

You'd never grow tired of this Curtis china closet! The original of this fine cabinet is displayed in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. It dates back to the early 18th century. Design C-6503 is one of many Curtis styles for corner or flat wall installation.

It takes first-rate designing to produce an entrance like this. Note the stately pilasters, with their Gothic shaped beading! This classical design is suitable for either the one or two-story house. Any style door may be used. Curtis offers you many entrance designs.

For better-looking, lifetime-lasting doors, insist on doors with Curtis Prespine Panels. Prespine won't warp, shrink or mar. A new wood product, Curtis Prespine duplicates the natural grain of ponderosa pine—ideal for natural finishes. If you prefer paint, Prespine takes it beautifully!

What is Design?

Design is more than just a list of rules. It's understanding why the bad disturbs you —and knowing why the good pleases you

by Mrs. Anson Howe Smith

THERE is an unfortunate impression, often encountered in flower arrangement circles, that design is a thing that can be understood merely by learning rules.

People with good memories, like clever little Poll-parrots, learn rule after rule until suddenly they are frightened and confused and just can't remember any of them. People with short memories give up the struggle early in the game.

A third group accepts the challenge of design as a horticulturist accepts the challenge of a new and difficult plant. It is something of exceptional interest, to be examined and compared with past experience, then used and tested until it is thoroughly understood.

Design is not merely a trick formula with which you can take three strelitzias and a dracaena leaf and

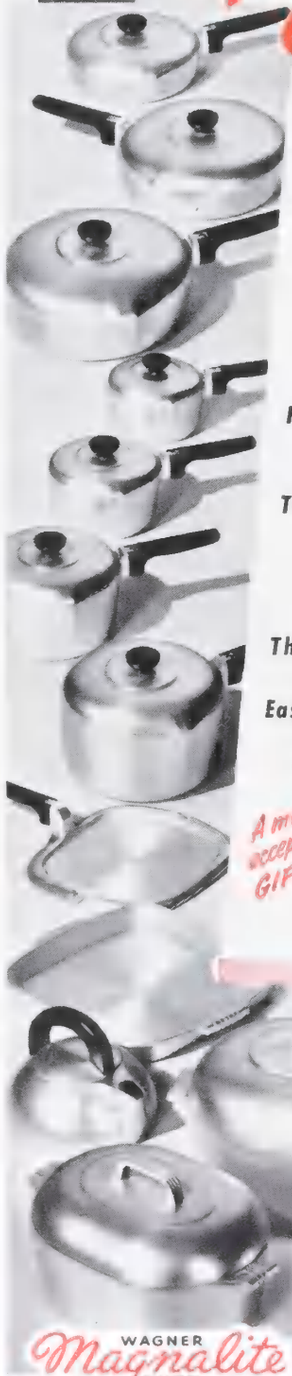
Bad balance and conflict of interest between arrangement and portrait need improvement. Notice how blooms on left were added to balance strong dark flower centers on right. Additions on right also help adjust balance. Main lines of design are more harmonious with shape of container—structure and silhouette are improved. Relationships have become more pleasing—full, massed arrangement is more in character with Victorian setting and horizontal lines relate better to picture frame and container. Contrast of form is achieved by adding a few buds. Dark-centered calendulas gave good contrast but were disturbing until the balance was corrected. By making the arrangement more solid, the flowers assume their rightful importance, and the portrait becomes just a background for the flowers.

The leaves and flowers conflict, as do the vertical and horizontal lines, in the original arrangement. By adding the flowers, they have become the important factor, with leaves merely serving as contrast. The dominant lines have been made vertical, eliminating former competition for importance. The changes have also improved the balance of the design. The structure, which was confused, has been simplified and made more consistent. The additions have kept the silhouette interesting, and at the same time have cleared up the conflicts within it. The strong vertical lines are more in harmony with the container and with the shape of the background. Dark leaves now serve as an attractive contrast to the white flowers and they don't compete.



SKETCHES BY JOHN BRIMER

The roses and the grasses compete for importance. Poor balance and weak structure also make this an unsatisfactory arrangement. By adding more leaves and roses at the right, the balance was improved and the vertical lines of the grasses no longer "fight" with the horizontal line of the roses. There is one strong curved line that unites the two, and the roses dominate the design. Structure was improved by the stronger line which the grasses were too weak to carry through. Additional roses, leaves, and the bud vary the silhouette and give interest to form contrast. Originally, the relationship of proportion between roses and grasses was not good. Medium-size leaves and the bud give proper scale transition for the large roses and tiny grass forms. The grasses now serve as an interesting contrast.

WHAT IS DESIGN?

win a blue ribbon at the Flower Show. The principles of design are not a set of rules; they are an explanation. They are not a method; they are "the reasons why certain things have been found to be aesthetically satisfying throughout the ages."

The catch is in the word satisfying. If you get any personal satisfaction from learning about design, and if you can see it as the explanation of the things you have always vaguely felt, it will fascinate you. You will never know all there is to know about design, but you will understand what you do know. To want to know is the first step toward knowing.

ABOREDOM with monotonous patterns, a fierce resentment over too many different patterns, an instinctive distaste for bad color, a rejection of vague forms, give you a desire to know how to avoid these unsatisfactory results. If you are actively disturbed by bad design, it follows automatically that you will respond with pleasure when it is good. Response comes first, and knowledge can be added, a little at a time, upon a secure foundation.

What are your reactions to the arrangements shown on pages 218-219? Study the "before" pictures. Test what you feel by what you know about design. See how and why the superimposed changes have greatly improved the arrangements.

Check each "before and after" picture for the following six important points to be considered in any design:

1. Balance
2. Structure
3. Silhouette
4. Pleasing relationships
5. Contrast
6. Focus of attention

Searching for the point that is missing or below standard is part of the fun and is the only way, incidentally, to understand design. If you can get all six factors to work together as a perfect team, the rest will follow of its own accord. The study of design will prove to be an exciting and rewarding adventure.

Radiant Baseboards plus

B & G Hydro-Flo Heating

A marvelous combination for winter comfort and home beauty

Of course you want radiant heating for your home . . . and here's one way to obtain its full comfort and economy benefits!

B & G Hydro-Flo Heating (a forced hot water system) with radiant baseboards offers three great advantages. First, amazingly smooth and accurate control of temperature. You don't open windows to regulate the temperature in a home with B & G Hydro-Flo Heating . . . the system automatically adjusts the heat supply to meet every change in the weather. No overheating, hence no fuel wasted.

Second, radiant sunny warmth from heating units which look like the conventional wooden baseboard and are just as unobtrusive. Radiant baseboards distribute heat so evenly that from floor to ceiling the temperature hardly varies.

THE MOST REVOLUTIONARY NEW HOUSE

[Note: Here Dr. Mills explains in detail how his house works. —Ed.]

Low-cost year-round comfort for everybody—that is my ambitious goal! I think I have the answer.

I proved my principle in the laboratory twelve years ago. In developing its application to a house, I decided at the outset that the house would have to prove these things:

1. A heating-and-cooling system can now be hardly more complicated nor expensive than a good lighting system.

2. It can ignore air temperature and humidity, and still keep one comfortable. This means a minimum of difference between indoors and outdoors—less shock, summer or winter.

3. Buildings need no longer contain complicated and expensive barriers to heat and vapor transfer.

The house has already begun to prove these things. So far my family and I have been perfectly warm with outside temperatures down to 20° F. We have been delightfully cool when our instruments outside read 96° F. and 70 per cent relative humidity. This has been accomplished solely by my reflective radiant conditioning system. There is no reason to doubt its performance under more extreme conditions.

The principle itself is utterly simple:

Make all inside surfaces of a room heat-reflective, then provide one element with an easily adjustable temperature to handle both heating and cooling, winter and summer.

Simplest way to apply the principle would be to run one set of coils around the ceiling cove. In winter it would carry hot water, in summer cold water. One "temperature" switch right next to the light switch would turn the entire heating-and-cooling system on and off manually. No need to waste it when the room is unoccupied.

But unfortunately my house could not prove this particular method of application. For several reasons, I heat with an electrical resistance element and cool with a regular refrigeration machine.

Heating

I had to "burn" electricity so I could measure easily the exact amount of energy consumed. (As soon as our measurements demonstrate the theory that reflective surfacings reduce heating loads two-thirds to three-fourths, I plan to rip out bodily my electrical heating elements and use hot water.) Let's run through a cycle, starting with room empty, system off:

You walk in, snap on the "heat" switch. Current flows through the electrical resistance element, which is just like the ones on your electric range, only bigger. This element is located in the upper part of the ceiling cove. (See cutaway diagram, page 187.) Radiant heat energy starts to build up in the room, and in just a few minutes your body heat loss is cut to exactly the right amount.

Actually there are four levels of heat available, each controlled by a thermostat. (The system is readily adaptable to additional levels if they prove necessary.) If the air is already comfortable, no heat comes on.

When you leave the room, turn off the heat—no sense wasting it.

Cooling

Perhaps the greatest thing about this entire system is its economy: Last June, during a muggy spell of heat (up to 96° F.), we were perfectly cool—at a cost of only two kilowatts of electricity per hour of operation for the entire house. That's only several cents' worth, no matter where you live. And you need operate the system only during the hot hours of the day when you're actually in the room.

The compressor in my basement, just like the one in your refrigerator, takes in warm Freon gas, changes it to cold liquid Freon, and removes the latent heat of condensation. So I simply pump the cold liquid Freon through the coil in the ceiling cove.

Cycle: Turn on the "coolness" switch. House current activates the electro-magnetic field of a solenoid valve, which then opens up and lets the cold Freon through. The Freon receives radiant heat from your body and is itself warmed. Returning to the compressor, it loses this warmth and heads for the room again. Line a refrigerator with foil and you've got the same thing, only colder. My cooling system is capable of giving comfort to as many as twelve people per room during the hottest weather we have.

What about condensation? This is the catch in radiant-cooling with an entire cold wall. In the Midwest's hot and humid summers,

Our master bedroom, with its Heritage-Henredon furniture, proves we did not have to abandon our desires as to looks. New heat-reflective wallpapers give little hint of the revolutionary concept of heating and cooling embodied here. This room is actually aluminum-lined.

The plan of my house was determined solely by the site and by our family needs. I used climate control devices to minimize the load on our heating and cooling equipment. I did not have to provide a boiler room. Otherwise, the new system had little effect on the plan.

PLANS BY SIGMAN-WARD

condensation would be terrific. But it's no problem at all with my system. Condensation is due to warm, humid air contacting a cold surface. The only cold object present in my rooms is the Freon coil in each ceiling trough. This coil cools the air immediately around it. The heavy cold air tends to remain in the trough rather than spill out into the room. Thus it minimizes the amount of warm air that can get at the cold coil. Any condensation that does form is guttered away like rainwater.

I use auxiliary heat in kitchen and baths to prevent water pipes and toilets from freezing. A thermostat turns this on whenever indoor air temperatures make it necessary. (If this sounds a bit Spartan, did I mention the exhilarating sensation of breathing cold air while your body is warm as toast?)

Ventilating

Before I tell you what I do to condition the air entering my house, be sure you understand what I don't do. I don't make any attempt to alter its temperature or humidity. My radiant heating-and-cooling system is completely independent of the air. As far as that goes, I could leave my windows wide open all year round.

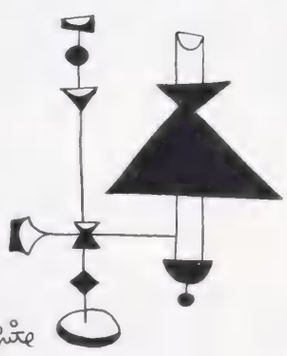
But our house overlooks downtown Cincinnati and the air is very dirty. So I clean it before we breathe it. My system for doing this has nothing to do with heating or cooling:



All incoming air goes between the charged plates of an electrostatic air filter in the basement. Incoming dirt particles are attracted to the plates, collect on them, and are washed off automatically every so often. Thus I introduce cleaned air through the perforated ceiling in our hall (see photograph, page 186). The slightly higher pressure inside the house continually forces air outward through all cracks and slightly opened windows. No dirt can come in against that pressure. Periodic dusting becomes a thing of the past in my house.

What about your house?

Well, you'll probably want to wait a while. There are no actual "bugs" in the system, but there are definitely some problems to be solved:

1. Reflective surfacing materials: Much more research is needed on the problem of reflecting various wave-lengths of radiant energy. It is not even known for sure just why aluminum is such a good reflector for the invisible range, nor why something white reflects all visible wave-lengths. Eventually such research may be expected to give a wide range of wall-surfacing materials. Meanwhile, you'll have to use unadorned aluminum or the wallpapers which I have used.

2. Special coil needed: For easy installation at minimum cost, you will run water for both heating and cooling through one coil—not two. This one coil will have to have maximum capacity for both jobs. This means maximum surface area. Slice through an ordinary, round pipe and you get a circle. Make that a star shape and you can have increased surface area with the same volume of water running through the pipe. This will provide utmost heating-and-cooling capacity at least pipe cost. You may be sure HOUSE BEAUTIFUL will let you know about such a pipe as soon as it's available.

3. Automatic control: My thermostats, just like the one in your living room, continually sample air temperature. Thus, when the weather is perfect, nothing happens when you flip the wall switch. But suppose it's cold outside. You turn the heat on as you enter the living room; everything's fine. Then five people come to call. Five walking furnaces. Soon there is too much radiant heat bouncing around the room, and you feel hot. Today's thermostats, designed for convective heating, sense this only indirectly. (The people finally warm the air somewhat.) What is needed is an instrument that measures (a) air temperature, (b) radiant temperature, (c) relative humidity. It would first correlate these readings, then issue its commands.

4. The heat pump: If you want to eliminate fuel storage, dirt, boiler, open flame, and so forth, heat with electricity. But, in most places today, electricity costs up to twice as much to burn as conventional fuels. You can get around that with a heat pump, which uses electricity to move heat from the earth into your house (and vice versa), giving you several units of heat free for each unit of electricity you buy. Same principle as a refrigerator.

With my system, you heat and cool only occupants and furnishings—not structure and air. So you can use a smaller and cheaper heat pump. When these are available in moderate-priced, packaged form, they'll be an ideal source of automatic heat and cold.

Still experimental

I suppose I should make more of the fact that all this is still in the experimental stage. It will be some time before tests and measurements are completed. It will take time to solve economically the engineering problems, etc. But I'm much too enthusiastic about my house to be that pedantic about it. The fact is: My family and I have enjoyed great comfort so far—in both hot weather and cold—and expect equal results in the future.

SKETCHES BY SIGMAN-WARD

If you study these four diagrams, you will see that this house plan is quite adaptable. Plot plan at upper left shows how it is oriented to the actual site in San Diego, with the driveway entering from east side of lot. It fits with equal ease on a south front (upper right) and west front (lower right) lot. However, the plan does not work so well on a north front lot. We show how it might be modified to keep same southern orientation for living room as in other lots (lower left). Note, however, that interior circulation suffers from this switch, and the hall to the bathroom loses privacy.

producers. Such atmospheric lighting effects are completely new in our times. And because they must be artfully designed and built into the structure, they are not cheap and are, therefore, not commonly seen.

As noticeable as our new use of light is the new use we make of the out-of-doors. The Victorians strained after this, but they didn't have insulating glass. A hundred years ago, as soon as they were able to build with glass at all, an all-glass room, the conservatory, containing an indoor garden, appeared in luxurious homes. But the Victorian conservatory remained something merely tacked on the building. Its flowers and its fountains did not enter the body of the house at all. You never sat in the conservatory. It was more like a hall.

TODAY the whole house takes on the quality of a garden room. Our rooms have glass walls and are flooded with sun. The carefully regulated temperature of our houses themselves surpasses the conditions in the Victorian conservatory. This makes it possible to grow plants in the house to an extent to which it was never possible before. And we have more varieties of plants at our disposal. We are no longer limited to the fern, the aspidistra, and the palm.

Just as our houses have become more livable for plants, our gardens are more livable for people. We build them with the intention of living in them. We provide easy communication, both visually and actually, between the garden and the house. We heat the floors of terraces. We light the gardens as extensively and as excitingly as we do the house. We treat different parts of the garden as different rooms—this one a sunny, wind-sheltered sun trap, another shaded from the sun and arranged to catch every bit of breeze.

But the chief difference between our garden and the Victorian one is not the appearance or the way in which it is laid out, but in the life which goes on in the place. This is symbolized by the difference between the croquet court and the swimming pool. Not only is the swimming pool a well-kept body of water beautiful in itself, but it gives great pleasure in its use. Even for the spectator, it makes the grace and beauty of the human body in action part of the adornment of the garden. The contemplation of this adds another dimension to experience.

The real character of a house does not lie entirely in its appearance. Its character derives from the sum total of the way in which it contributes to the richness and beauty of the life within. Appearance is important only insofar as it contributes to this.

Four hundred years ago, the printed word widened man's horizons, but it complicated his house. It added a new room, the library. Today, another means for annihilating time and space, through recorded music, has been put at our command. Through it, the whole range of experience, from its most sensuous elements to its most intellectual ones, is brought into our life, yet this new addition, instead of complicating our houses simplifies them. For in order to hear recorded music, not one single thing—not even the mouth of the loud speaker—need appear. In the most luxurious small houses all the sound mechanisms are built in and concealed. As the lighting fixture disappears from the modern home, so is the musical instrument disappearing. Music, like light, becomes an experience without being seen as a piece of furniture.

So we become aware that the apparent simplicity of the new houses is a most deceptive thing. It is not bareness, meagerness, nor even straightforwardness. It is a rich thing rather than a poor one. It results from a high degree of organization in all parts of our life.

EVERYTHING in our houses tells of the highly developed society in which we live. There is a great network of social services, of community life, which creates the form of our houses, just as much as if they were pieces of furniture in the room. The Venetians had marble steps, but they did not have a daily postal service. However, it costs more to keep a postal system working day after day, year after year, than it does to build marble halls. Wealth is no longer displayed by the possession of things which are merely expensive, like carved furniture, which, once you get it, is merely something which has to be dusted every day. With us, wealth is shown by the way in which we make our environment work for us. It is this workableness that is the secret of what we have which is different from everything else in of their cookery has taught them to make the most of very little. Consequently, these techniques are ideal for leftover cookery, where you start with limited quantities—particularly meat.

If you haven't investigated smörgasbord cookery, I recommend you start at once. Get Anna Olsson Coombs' The Smörgasbord Cookbook (Current Books) and start broadening your repertoire with Scandinavian tricks. Here's how I do the Stanton version:

ON Sunday nights for supper we raid the ice box. One of my family's favorite raids, when I have saved enough cooked foods to make it, is smörgasbord. Having a freezer is the biggest aid, but if you haven't one, you can utilize an ice tray.

During the week I wrap small amounts of leftover meat in wax paper, put them in a small nylon bag, expel the air, twist the end of the bag, put on a rubber band to keep out the air, and pop them into the freezer. (These meats will keep frozen for several months, if you want to hoard them for a big smörgasbord party.)

But for our Sunday night parties, with or without guests, I get these meats out of the freezer Saturday night and put them in the refrigerator. Sometimes I slice the meat paper-thin. Other times I chop it and mix with sour cream and a little diced celery. Or I make different spreads, mincing the meat and following the line of least resistance by using whatever happens to be on hand.

I arrange these cold things in our little curry condiment dishes on the lazy susan, with piles of French bread, so everybody can spread and combine to suit himself.

Often I have a large bowl of cottage cheese with chives, and a bowl of canned beets with chopped green onions and a little white wine vinegar. (Do not throw away the juice from the canned beets for that makes a delicious Borscht for Monday night's dinner, by adding a can of consommé, finely-chopped cabbage, and green onion, served with a spoonful of sour cream.)

Sometimes I serve the smörgasbord with an accompaniment of rye bread and Rye Crisp. If the evening is cold, a bowl of hot soup comes first. This can be a fun supper for Sundays, and can be so easily done. For you have collected your Latticed wall of Blue Ridge Doublex Glass transmits light two ways, creates a center of beauty on both sides. Architects: Leon and Lionel Levy, New York City.

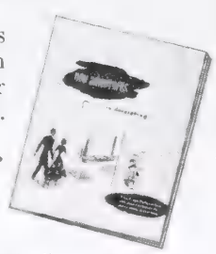
Light up two rooms

...THROUGH ONE WALL



You get a stunning effect with a wall of translucent glass. Light from one room streams through into the other. Both rooms are brighter, more interesting, with a decorative partition of patterned glass that lifts them far above the ordinary.

More than 20 patterns of Blue Ridge Glass give you a wide choice in decorative themes. You can choose from linear, textured and checkered patterns . . . patterns of pronounced design or patterns that create an all-over, softly-diffused glow of light. Though they transmit light, they obscure vision from room to room, giving you privacy.

Blue Ridge Patterned Glass is economical. It provides a finished wall surface for two rooms at once. It never needs painting or refinishing. Ask your L·O·F Distributor (he's listed in the yellow pages of your phone book) to show you the distinctive Blue Ridge Patterns. Or mail the coupon below for full information.

the past. It is something which is characteristic of a new kind of wealth and well being—an American one.

It is the house which works perfectly—which has the unobtrusive comfort of Climate Control: which has perfect livability for the present time: which is the embodiment of luxury today. It is infinitely more desirable to be comfortable in a simple room than to be alternately freezing and sweltering in a room with Renaissance paintings on the walls. Keeping up with the Joneses has become a new kind of race. We no longer need to own elaborate carved furniture in order to keep up with the Joneses. The Joneses have gone in for summer air conditioning and are preserving their Florida tan by sitting in their outdoor sun-trap in March and April.

The new control over light, new ways of garden design, and the advent of recorded music do not represent all the new resources at our disposal for the betterment of our houses, by any means, whether they be playhouses or one of the numerous other types we Americans have. We are able to use delicious, delicate colors and plain surfaces because we have the means to keep them clean. Before vacuum cleaners and dry-cleaning methods, we had to rely on the use of dark colors, which did not show the dust, and patterned surfaces—a kind of camouflage in concealing spots.

As a result, manufacturers have come forward with objects not only better suited to our needs, but also styled more suitably for the requirements of today. European manufacturers are finding it increasingly hard to produce articles acceptable to American taste. Present-day Americans who are overcome by a desire to bring into their houses something unusual and lovely from abroad are more inclined to cover their walls with orchids, flown in from Hawaii for a party, than to acquire French tapestries for which we no longer have the wall space anyway.

Just as we use new ways to secure richness and variety in the house, so we use new ways to acquire the sense of dignity and restraint. We no longer need to use furniture designed for a period in which people did not lounge in public or cross their knees. The same effect may be secured more easily and permanently by relying on well-proportioned rooms, well-designed modern furniture, and the absence of clutter or the bizarre.

With our new attitude toward decoration we see that no article in our possession should have a vested interest in its place. Everything which stays in the house should prove its right to remain by demonstrating its usefulness, its beauty, and its compatibility with what is already there. When we have done this, as is being done in the new playhouses, we have taken a great step forward in the display of discrimination, taste, affluence.

With the luxurious and deceptively simple small house—itself merely an incident in a beautiful garden which provides for outdoor living and play—it is not necessary to leave one's house and go anywhere in order to secure relaxation. It can be done better at home. This is the kind of luxury for the new kind of living. It forces certain conclusions from us. Above all, it makes us realize that in our bright new world there is more than one way to build our houses, to decorate and furnish them.

There is more than one way to add richness to our lives—more than one way in which to live.

PERM-A-LATOR . . . the new miracle wire insulator is the strongest insulator used in making mattresses, box springs and upholstered furniture. 3 Workrooms Worth Copying

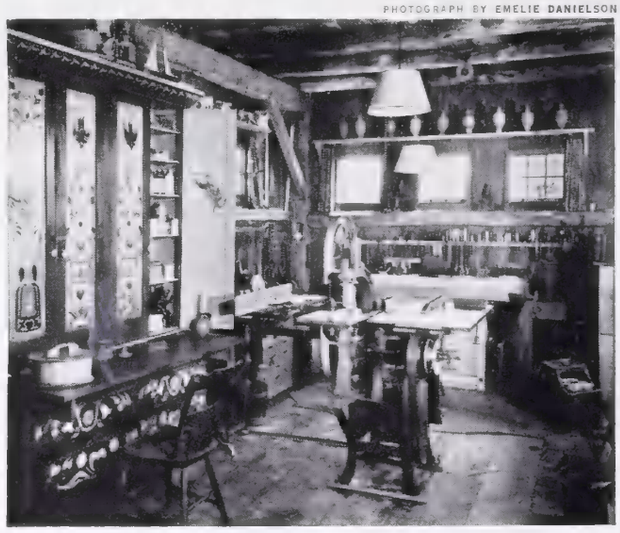
by W. W. Ward

The well-planned workshop increases both pleasure and efficiency in your homework

The whir of a wood lathe or the thin whine of the scroll saw is echoing more and more from the attics, basements and garages of American homes. The man of the house can often be found amid shavings and sawdust, and as proud of a newly-wrought bookcase as he ever was of a birdie on the sixteenth hole.



For the workshop is creative. That homemade birdhouse out in the side yard will outlast a dozen crumpled scorecards.

A hammer, saw, an assortment of nails in an old cigar box may be the workroom acorn. But grow they will, as the skill and enthusiasm of the owner grows, until the placement of the racks, the shelves, the cabinets, the benches and all the implements becomes as complicated as the furniture arrangement in the living room.

Utility is the keynote. Rack upon rack of chisels, hammers, screwdrivers and bits must be placed where the man at the work table can reach them quickly and easily. Cabinets holding paints and varnishes must be close to the spray rack; nail and screw compartments handy to the place of assembly. And no matter how small the start, the acquisition of power implements is mostly a matter of time and budget, and their placement is as fine a point as the location of a new piano in the living room. Properly located, they can save time and steps, and their position must be based on the special job they do.

How Glass can build beauty into your home

AN EXCITING CLIMAX to your home decorating plan is a bathroom with walls of lovely Carrara Structural Glass. These Carrara walls—so perfectly and elegantly modern—can be applied right over your present bathroom walls if you like. And you have ten appealing colors of Carrara Glass to choose from. Once you've installed Carrara, you'll have your reward not only in enhanced bathroom beauty, but in permanence, economy and easy cleaning, too. (Note the handsome panel of Plate Glass Mirrors above the tub.)

ONE OF THE SIMPLEST • • • and most effective . . . decorating tricks of them all is the use of a Pittsburgh Plate Glass wall mirror like this behind your dining-room buffet. It forms a perfect setting for furniture and silver, increases the apparent size of the room, and reflects in warm detail the color, movement and good cheer of pleasant meals. And for a graceful finishing touch, why not a mirrored or Plate Glass top for buffet and server?

The lighting of a good workshop demands consideration and planning. Guiding the saw teeth along a thin pencil line or setting the bore to a tiny dot is no place for a shadow. Adequate ventilation should carry away the strength of the paint smell and decrease the discomfort of hard work on a hot day. And in winter the spot where most of your work is done should have ample heat.

As the workroom grows decorative effects can be as much a test of ingenuity as building a new gun rack or an eight-foot dinghy. Cabinet walls can be made for murals, frames for pictures along the walls. Knotty pine gives a nice appearance: power tool frames can be attractively cut. For this is a hobby room, and without a hobby a man is at loose ends. It should live up to its importance.

of guests. For all the privacy this little house affords, it never says: "Go away. We don't want you here."

It is a truly modern house, in plan, in construction, and in materials. But its designer did not disdain details of the traditional American idiom, such as the low, gabled roof and the generous fireplace that welcomes you as you walk into the living room. It solves many of the problems which have been of greatest concern to modern architects—such as the high cost of space, the necessity for ease of maintenance, the demands of servantless living. But they have been solved—not by bizarre innovations—but by typically American ingenuity coupled with common sense.

Below is a list of the ingredients that helped make this the FIRST house of 1950:

Place two terraces on the same side of the house and use one for dining and one for living purposes. In the foreground is the dining-terrace, small and intimate for family use, while the more spacious living-terrace is just visible behind the evergreens.

Have TWO terraces

for outdoor living around the clock

by Katrina Thomas

TWO terraces are better than one in almost any climate if you want the maximum in outdoor living. The problem of an unshaded terrace being too hot during the sultry summer weather, and a shaded terrace being too cool during the early spring and late fall, can be solved by having two terraces. If your house were so oriented that you could have an east and a west terrace, you could move around the house as the sun moves across the sky. But often your lot is too narrow for a house flanked with terraces, or, if you put them at the front and back of the house, one is usually too public.

The Walter Rebmanns, who live outside of Philadelphia, solved their particular problem by putting both terraces on the same side of the house. There they are both private, unseen by approaching guests and grocery boys, and shade is provided with planting. While one terrace is unshaded, the other gets a mottled shade cast by the surrounding trees.

Your terraces can be as different in appearance as they are in purpose. The Rebmanns have successfully combined formality and informality. The dining-terrace—small, intimate, and informal, used mainly by the family—is hardly more than a widening of the garden path. It is paved with old brick and located right outside a bow window which provides entrance into the dining room. In the early morning on bright days it is warm and sunny for cheerful breakfasting, but by lunch time is partially shaded from the hot midday sun. An apple tree brought up from the orchard adds to the informality. It provides color with its lush bloom in spring and ripening apples in fall.

The living-terrace is shaded most of the day by a large tree and the neighboring woods. Many people find mottled shade cast by trees much more pleasant and comfortable than the complete shade provided by a porch roof. This terrace is larger and more formal than the dining-terrace. It is paved with big flagstones, cut geometrically and set close enough together to make sure footing for chair and table legs. Here is an ideal place to relax on summer afternoons with a cool drink, or entertain a crowd.

The dining-terrace is warm and sunny at breakfast. It is laid in a curve to match the bow window of the dining room which is accessible by two doors in the bow. An evergreen and flower border divides terrace from lawn, making it a part of the house and its living.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

Living-terrace stays cool and comfortable because it is in mottled shade most of the day. The flagging, cut four-square, is easy to lay and makes for sure footing for the outdoor furniture which stays out all the time, while the pillows are easily carried back and forth.

foods over the space of a few days or even weeks. As a matter of fact, I hope you have discovered how your freezer can be a bank, with stored goodies, lots of them previously cooked.

Another festive dish that I run up is Armenian Shish Kebabs—morsels of goodness on skewers. If I have had a ham, I cut the ham in squares, put them on the skewers, alternating them with canned whole baby beets or canned pineapple or artichoke hearts or canned onions.

Use anything on the skewers that has been previously cooked, so that all you have to do is heat for five minutes on each side. If you feel that the meat might be dry, brush all of the "kebabs" on the skewer with butter, baste with a little chicken broth once or twice. If you have lamb chunks for the skewers, use raw eggplant, canned onions, and tomatoes. If there is cold beef, alternate with canned baby onions, tomatoes, green pepper, if you like, and baste with a little consommé. You can let your imagination go on and on when you serve a dish like this, so it need never be the same.

CHINESE cookery really offers more inspiration for leftover dishes than that of any other country. Many Chinese recipes call for very little meat, which is extended by the addition of eggs, rice, scallion tops, and other things you are sure to have on hand. I recommend that you get a cookbook called Cook at Home in Chinese by Henry Low (Macmillan). It contains American versions of Chinese recipes—American in that you can operate without shopping in a Chinese grocery store, with no other ingredients than those you can buy from your own grocer. This cookbook has excellent ideas, and once you've tried a few recipes, you'll see what the principles are, and will quickly get the point about how Chinese cookery applies to leftover cookery. In fact, I know some people who have become so infatuated with Chinese cooking that they deliberately roast excess quantities of meats in order to have a pre-cooked supply for their favorite Chinese dishes. That's really carrying the leftover idea to its ultimate completion, isn't it? So do get that book!

Our dog Maybe (Maybe she is a Dalmation) never gets the bones from a roast, steak, lamb, or fowl until they have given their all to the soup kettle. I fling in the bones, add water, canned consommé or Scotch broth if it is a lamb bone. If the bones are from a roast chicken, I add chicken concentrate, celery, carrots, parsley, onion, etc. This kind of brew makes a wonderful soup for a seasoning sauce. After giving the poor dog the bone, I skim off the fat and grease from the cooled soup. Then I whizz up the soup in the electric blender. With the vegetables whizzed, you get a thickened, delicious soup.

I am honestly delighted, as I hope I've proved, to have cooked foods in the freezer or refrigerator for they are such a help in preparing future menus. Very often, I deliberately order more than I need just to have our dinner prepared for the next night or next week.

To go back to all the food that was prepared for our Friday night party for the guests who could not get there at the last minute. We will have part of the salmon used as soup. If it is a cold night I will poach half of it in chicken broth and serve it hot. Or I might make a bisque out of it by opening a can of minced clams whizzing them in the electric blender and then dropping in the fish in small bits and whizzing it until it is a creamy consistency. The other half of the remaining fish I will put in the freezer for our Sunday night supper two weeks hence. The cucumbers in sour cream, that were served with the party fish, I will chop up and use as a salad dressing. The surplus chicken will be used, in sour cream, for Sunday lunch. The spaghetti will be reheated in cream with fresh or frozen corn. Or I'll keep the spaghetti until Monday, and make it the base for a casserole.

SO, you see, the idea of warmed up leftovers should be ruled out of your speech and your thoughts. You need, instead, a whole new system of cookery based on using pre-cooked ingredients. Once you get this point of view, you save time, and you eat better.

Deliberately buying more than you need in order to have some ready-cooked ingredients prepared in advanced is the kind of planning ahead which will give you more time for other things. You will find that your marketing problems will be simplified. And you'll never experience again that discouraging state of "Oh, what in the world shall we have for dinner tonight?" For your freezer will be filled with wonderful, stimulating packages of what you used to call leftovers.

atitudes except in severe winters, nd possibly in many mild winters n the Boston and Milwaukee ones.

How? You must feed your lawn enerously and regularly every sec- nd month throughout the entire ear. Few people use enough plant ood on their lawns. Most people nistakenly feel that one spring ap- lication is adequate. As a result, ost lawns turn brown in mid- utumn and stay unsightly until pring. Such lawns are suffering a orderline adequacy of plant food, nough to supply only the summer eeds of the grass when the high oil temperature makes all the lant food quickly available, but ot enough when the cold soil tem- eratures of autumn slow the hemical change in the soil dras- ically. Two fall feedings overcome he difficulty. Make one immedi- tely, another in six weeks. Then dopt the new every-second-month rogram.

Just how much plant food you se for each application depends pon the particular brand you buy. Read the directions and follow the ecommended rate for lawns. You can use a strictly organic plant food during the summer, but not in the spring or fall because the soil is too cold at these times for the nitrogen to be of any use to the grass. Chemical plant foods, like Vigoro, Vertagreen, etc., are immediately available for plant growth, even when applied in midwinter. Most brands also contain some organic nitrogen for lasting action, but this feature isn't important in the new frequent-feed system.

TO INSURE an even distribution of the plant food, use one of the small carts made for this purpose. This avoids streaks of uneven growth and, more important, uneven color. To be safe, always sprinkle the lawn immediately to wash the plant food off the leaves, for it causes a browning or "burning." Skip this precaution only if you are sure rain is imminent.

Undoubtedly the easiest way to apply plant food involves use of a special attachment that adds the plant food to the water distributed by your lawn sprinkler. You use any powder form of plant food you

HOW TO SUCCEED WITH WINDOW-BOX GARDENS

• Here is what you can do if you have a sunny exposure. When you plant it, be sure to allow for drainage. Run half-inch pipes through base of outer wall or put in six inches of small stones under the soil.

Use any reasonably good garden soil. Mix in 20 to 30 per cent of peat or other humus. A small amount of plant food also helps, but don't overfeed. Geraniums, especially, must not be overfed. If you give them too much food, they produce a lush growth of leaves but few flowers.

It will also pay you to keep a mulch over the soil at all times to prevent too rapid drying out. Exceptions: succulents, and soft-stemmed plants like California poppies. Use a one-inch layer of peat, Topper, vermiculite, or fine crushed stone (if you use the soft-stemmed plants).

Another good way to reduce the need of frequent watering and enable you to go away for short trips is to use "self-watering" window boxes. Most have false bottoms which conceal reservoirs for water beneath the soil. Glass wicks bring the water slowly and constantly up into the soil.

In all cases, make sure your plants have sufficient drainage to carry off excess water. The easiest way is to bore a series of holes in or near the bottom of the box

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

• Your window boxes should match the style of your home. The plants in the boxes are balcony petunias—low, compact, and colorful. They give months of bloom with little care. Sow seeds or buy started plants.

EARLY NEXT SPRING!

Holland Bulbs Make Spring Glorious

This fall, with little effort and at low cost you can have your garden filled with gorgeous color all next spring—two to three whole months before most other flowers bloom!

It's so easy to plant Tulips, Daffodils, Hyacinths, Crocus—in beds or borders, along a path or drive, in front of evergreens or shrubs, even at your doorstep.

To get the most for your money—largest flowers, choicest colors—be sure you plant bulbs imported from Holland. Your bulbs are ready now, so see your local store or order from your favorite catalog right away!

Associated Bulb Growers of Holland, Dept. 22, 41 E. 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

Get Imported Holland Bulbs from seedsmen, nurseries, florists, also chain, hardware, and dept. stores.

Dealers displaying this emblem have helpful booklets telling how to plant, filled with ideas for your garden—for as few as a dozen bulbs, up to hundreds of a kind.

The Log of the Practical Gardener

Dry cleaners

Dry-cleaning fluids are death to plants. Even the drip from clothes hung out to dry kills lawngrass and any other plants it hits—another good reason for the modern trend toward paved laundry yards.

Mouse stopper

If moles and mice get after your tulip bulbs, plant the bulbs inside wire baskets sunk into the ground. Several firms now sell ready-made baskets, or you can make your own from half-inch mesh "hardware cloth."

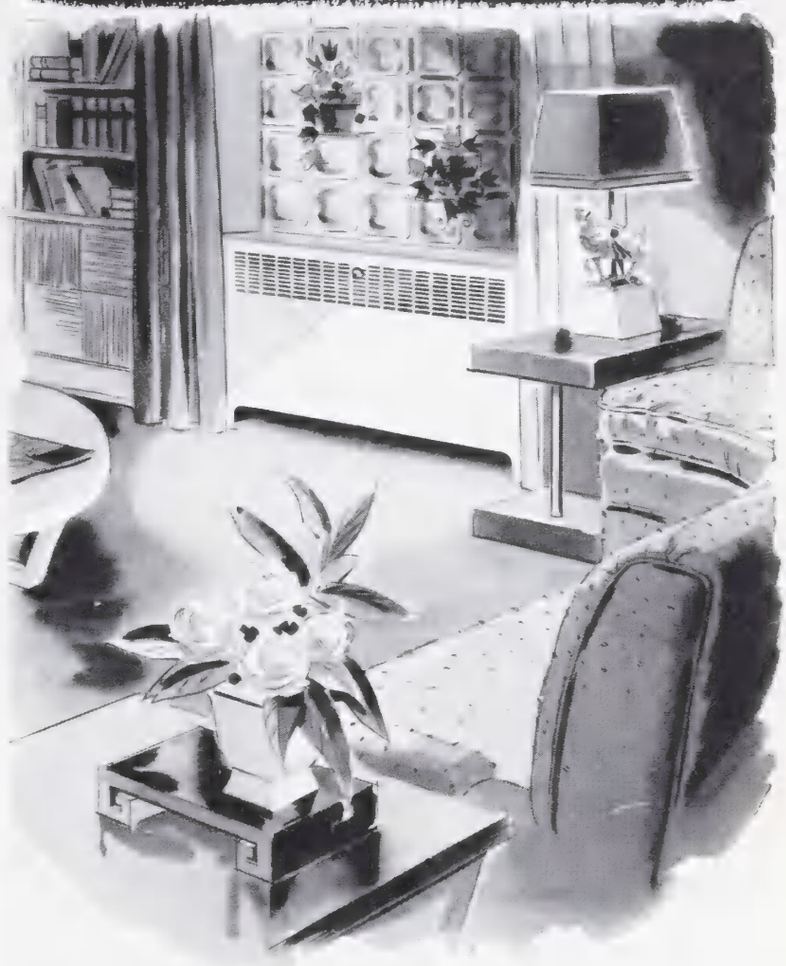
Don't hesitate

Lawns seeded in October will be much better next summer (far fewer weeds or bare spots) than lawns seeded next spring, so don't hesitate if you didn't get the job done last month, the usual lawn-planting time.

Plant horror

There's still one horror of the Victorian era that shows up in some home gardens even in 1950—lawn shrubs snipped into tight globes. Confine the use of hedge shears to formal hedges. Use only pruning shears on shrubs, and use them only to remove worn-out branches entirely (cut them off as close to the ground as possible).

To grow



Not enough people know about hardy fall asters. They live for years and bloom for weeks each fall. There's still time to plant them this fall for a good flower show next year. Look in the nursery catalogs for variety descriptions on flower colors and plant sizes.

Why rake leaves?

Do you still rake leaves each fall? It's not necessary, you know. Now you can buy a power leaf grinder (Jacobsen or Propulsion Mow-Master) that chews the leaves into little pieces and distributes these as a mulch, which becomes invisible after the first rain or two washes your lawn. The same machine works the rest of the year as a power mower after a few simple changes.

San Juan, Puerto Rico—Two flying services at the Isla Grande Airport now offer for rental two-passenger planes on a you-drive-it basis, through which, at $15 per half hour, qualified flyers can go aerial sight-seeing on their own.

Eureka Springs, in the Ozarks of Arkansas—Do, if you can, manage to be around between October 10 and 21, when the Ozark Folk Festival lures from here and there one of the country's larger, more varied, and more talented aggregations of fiddlers, ballad singers, and square dance sets to produce an amount and caliber of Turkey in the Straw and do-se-do you'll seldom encounter elsewhere.

Goodbye, Summer!

Michigan's Upper Peninsula, where the air is washed by two Great Lakes, has a particular sparkle this time of year, its days sun-warmed, its nights fall-cooled and pungent with burning pine logs. And the vast timberlands are so bright with brilliant foliage that many resorts, although remaining open ostensibly for the October bird hunting and the November deer season, offer special facilities during the early-October foliage peak. If you're traveling east to west, you might spend some time in the Newberry area, taking advantage of the fact that the trip to beautiful Tahquamenon Falls—by Toonerville Trolley out of Soo Junction, then 52 miles by river boat—extends the season with several week-end fall color specials. You'll want to cross the Peninsula through the magificent Hiawatha Forest to the Lake Superior side, lingering around Munising, where a boat trip shows you the Pictured Rocks in fall finery.

Still farther north, in the Copper Country, you will find such trips as the Brockway Mountain Drive glorified by fall, and Lake Superior Aviation, out of Houghton, ready with charter color tours over the Keweenaw Peninsula.

And you'll want to plot time for the Green Bay area back on the Lake Michigan side, enough at least to see the Garden Peninsula in fall array, and take one of the many scenic drives out of Menominee. Or you may wish to pick one resort and settle in. Most Upper Peninsula resorts are deliberately rustic, offering rooms at a central lodge plus individual cabins. But be not deceived by this rusticity. Some specialize in gourmet cooking; and at Deertrack Village, out of Marquette, are cabins with panel heat! And most will equip you with maps if not guides to the best of local color. Some, like the resort village of Blaney Park, will take you on color tours by car or horseback, not only through its own 54 square miles of beauty, but elsewhere on the Peninsula.

And at Phil De Graff's Lodges, Trout Lake, September 30 through October 17 is set aside as Indian Summer, during which you will not only be encouraged but equipped for such choice color trips as that to the Hulbert Boat Company Landing. From here, on a converted Landing Craft, you start a 5-hour boat, bus, and walking trip to Upper Tahquamenon Falls. For either, information is easily come by, either at one of the State Police Highway Stations as you ap-

Guatemala

There's color—and color—in Guatemala. Part of it is a mere matter of rich pigmentation and revealing sun: the flowers that blaze in Guatemala City; the sapphire of Lake Atitlan; the Indian in crimson huipil, multi-colored skirt, embroidered jacket; distant volcanic peaks, rich plum and apricot against an electric blue sky. Part of it is background, in which a persistent Mayan culture and the Spanish Colonial mingle today as they never did in history. The Indian himself represents one, as do the amazing monoliths at Quirigua, carved before 800, and the Mayan ruins now being restored at Zaculeu near Huehuetenango. Antigua, where you may sleep in a house built in 1543, or in a hotel set in an old monastery garden, is a treasure chest of the other. And, to find the two meeting, you have only to visit one of the innumerable market days, at which the Indians so frequently spread their colorful wares at the very steps of the Cathedral, handily combining business with worship.

You get four days of Guatemala on United Fruit line's 17-day cruises from New York—11 days from New Orleans; and eleven days on its longer cruises, 24 days from New York, 18 from New Orleans. Or you can fly down on your own on Pan American from New Orleans, Mexico City, or Panama City, TACA Airlines from New Orleans or Mexico City, and join up in Guatemala City with one of the 14 tours, from one to 15 days, offered by Wagons-Lits Cook.

To escape the so-called rainy season, and perhaps sacrifice a little of the color in favor of going without a raincoat, go after November first. Take along walking shoes, and, since Guatemala City is 5,000 feet up, a topcoat.

Tea for you

One hears too much, perhaps, about how British is Victoria, how Queen Mary the hats, how impeccable the manners, how ceremonial the afternoon tea at the ivy-adorned Empress Hotel—and not nearly enough about Victoria's all-year climate. Located on the southern tip of Canada's Vancouver Island, where water, wind, and mountain combine to cloak her from wintry blasts. Victoria's golf courses, tennis courts, gardens, and fishing spots actually know no season, and if you require swimming with your winter vacation, you can do it, in sea water, in the glass-enclosed, palm-tree-embellished Crystal Garden only a block from the hotel.

In addition, fall, winter, and springtime visitors find fewer fellow passengers interrupting their enjoyment of the San Juan Islands as they cross over aboard one of Canadian Pacific's Princess ships, which regularly serve the Seattle-Victoria-Vancouver triangle, or on a Black Ball Line super ferry out of Seattle. At the Empress, they find such favorable rates as an outside room for two with bath for $195 monthly. Reservations are easier to get than during the summer, except at holiday time, when the Empress stages a traditional English Christmas complete with boar's head and Yule log and is likely to be crowded.

And best of all, you can count any time on Victoria's pace, which is leisurely, polite, and restful, conducive to long walks in the pleasant parks, meditation in the rose gardens, careful buying in shops offering English bone china, glass, silver, woolens, and Canadian handicrafts, and time really to see the scenery on scenic Malahat Drive. Should you care for details, get them from either the Canadian Pacific Railway or the British Columbia Travel Bureau, Victoria, B. C., Canada.

How do you like your desert?

Active? Big? Storied? You can find all three comparatively close together in the desert country of Southern California. So pause before you assume that a California desert vacation means Palm Springs—or Palm Springs. Even after you investigate, this well-groomed emerald oasis at the foot of Mount San Jacinto may still be your choice. If you like luxurious hotels, with celebrities sitting just across the dining room, and a full round of organized activity, this is the place for you.

Palm Springs sets the pattern also for other, newer resorts where the San Jacintos meet the Colorado Desert, places like Palm Desert and La Quinta, where the luxury and the activity may be only less so. But you will also find a bustle of activity in Borrego Desert, south of Palm Springs in eastern San Diego County, where the accommodations are numerous and varied. The program is likewise, from sports to glider contests and mineralogy trips—on which you may or may not find yourself a real semi-precious stone—and the prices are generally reasonable.

For an entirely different desert experience, however, you have only to go east from Palm Springs toward Twenty-nine Palms, which is farther out on the desert floor, gateway to that weird jungle, the Joshua Tree National Monument. Once you leave the real estate projects along the highway behind, you're in a land of vast, solitary, enchanting distances. And you'll find still another kind of desert north across the San Bernardino Mountains, where Apple and Lucerne Valleys temper and break between mountain and the Mojave. Guest ranches, with all they imply, are typical, and you can explore ghost gold towns like Calico. For information on all or any: The All-Year Club of Southern California, 629 South Hill Street, Los Angeles 14.

All British

Whatever your plans for Europe next year, they will be influenced in some way by the fact that 1951 is Festival Year in Britain, a celebration of the past, present, and future of British life that will give you plusses, any time between May and September, not only in London, but throughout the rest of England, and in Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland as well.

As central Festival spot, London has been preparing for some time, clearing away the reminders of wartime bombing on the South Bank of the Thames and erecting there a permanent, sound-proofed concert hall, a giant Dome of Discovery, and pavilions dedicated to British achievements in industry, shipping, and the like. Other focal points will be an Exhibition of Science in Kensington, of Architecture in the East End, Industrial Power at Glasgow, Industry and Agriculture at Belfast. And since festivals are supposed to be festive, you will find an amusement area in London's Battersea Park, and plays, pageants, concerts, sports events, and much merry-making almost anywhere you go in Britain.

Far horizons

Should you wish to join the more adventuresome travel crowds, who are gradually pushing their ways farther and farther off the beaten path, you might investigate these, all more or less available again by plane if not by ship:

Ethiopia, where modern hotels under Swiss management plus the Ethiopian Airline now make possible a revealing once-over, from the deep green crater lakes of Bishoftu, to the excellent hunting grounds just out of Addis Ababa. Recent tours have returned by boat from the Sudan, down the winding, green Nile past the more ancient cities of Egypt.

Algiers, which now has published a small booklet entitled Comment Visiter L'Algerie, covering entry, exit, and currency information, transportation and hotels, the climate and other pertinent points. Available through the French National Tourist Office, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Pakistan, where a new Metropole Hotel has just opened in Karachi, and a train tour takes you from Karachi to Mohenjodaro, whose ruins are considered by some the equal of any. In Pakistan, train travel is itself an adventure, with Cook supplying not only your bedding, but the en-route servant customary for first and air-conditioned class passengers.

Greece is yours again. You'll probably want to headquarter in one of the good hotels in Athens—single, with meals, from $5—and journey out to such as Mycenae, Olympia, Delphi, and Knosses on the Island of Crete.

Turkey, too, invites you and reminds you that southern Turkey has a winter warm and sunny, and that, though food and transportation may be somewhat higher than in Europe. Istanbul and Andara, hotels charge as little as $4 a day. Nor is Turkey all mosques and minarets. You can enjoy excellent bathing beaches, like Florida on the Sea of Marmora, visit the Black Sea and the Bosphorus, even ski on Mt. Olympus.

Iraq. Tours to the 6,000-year ruins at Ur of the Chaldees and ancient Babylon have been set up by the Iraqui State Railways and the Baghdad and Basra offices of Thos. Cook & Son. Designed primarily for American and British employees of Near East oil companies, they start at Basra, and include the Euphrates towns of Nasiriyah and Hillah.

Lebanon, where a notable ski season opens around November 1. You can stay at the St. Georges or the Normandie in Beirut, $6 up, and go back and forth between the warm Mediterranean beaches and the ski slopes. Or you can stay at the Hotel de Cedres, or Hotel Mon Repos at the Cedars themselves, one of the more famous ski spots as well as a famous name, and still be only 20 minutes from a swim.

Going—going . . .

Or are you? If you are even hoping to take a major late winter or early spring trip, now is none too soon to realize that the choicer reservations are going fast, and to do something definite to make sure you'll be along. Here, just by way of encouraging an early visit with your travel agent, are possibilities:

January 6—The Stella Polaris is due to sail from New Orleans on a repeat of its Around The World Guest Cruise, stopping at 42 ports, chiefly exotic, during 134 days, $2950 and upward, including what is billed as a comprehensive shore program. The House of Travel, 47 East 47 St., New York.

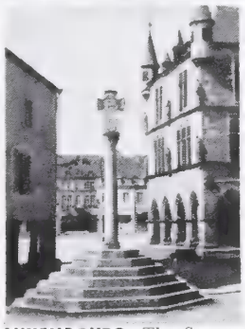
January 6—The Caronia on the first special round-the-world cruise since the war, taken westward, ending in Southampton, whence you can return to New York when you choose on any other Cunard sailing. 111 days, $3500.

February 7—The proud new Oslofjord departs on a 54-day Mediterranean cruise—395 passengers only—22 ports including Casablanca and Oran, with six days in Egypt and overland trips in Egypt and the Holy Land. From $1100.

February 8—Spring Study Tour of Europe for mid-semester graduates and others so inclined, including around a month each at the Universities of Florence, Grenoble, Heidelberg, London, with liberal sight-seeing, 205 days, $1950. Sita-Adventure Trails, New York, Chicago, Santa Barbara.

February 10—Gala maiden voyage of the new, super deluxe S. S. Independence, a 53-day Mediterranean swing, three continents, thirteen countries, four islands, 22 ports, $1500 to $15,000 in multi-room suites with private verandas.

April 15—Spring cruise tour of southern and northern Europe, Spain, Italy, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Scandinavia, Scotland, ending in England, July 18, $2935 Hemphill World Cruises, 727 West 7th Street, Los Angeles, Calif.



BELGIUM—One of the quiet canals in picturesque Bruges, showing the Belfry and typical houses along the peaceful water's edge.

FRANCE—The historic Arch of Triumph on the Champs Elysees in Paris. It is the largest and most beautiful of all triumphal arches.

HOLLAND—Slender mills and graceful steeples in the Province of Zeeland, typical of picturesque scenery in the Netherlands.

LUXEMBOURG—The Square and Town Hall in medieval Echternach, Luxembourg, founded in the seventh century, A.D.

MONACO—The famous Casino of Monte-Carlo situated in luxurious gardens on the sunny shores of the blue Mediterranean.

PORTUGAL—Square outside Monastery of San Jeronimos, showing a mosaic sidewalk, typical of beautiful Lisbon Plazas.

Fall Roses

You still hear that the soil should be trenched two feet deep for roses, advice that came originally from old-time professional gardeners who brought it along with them from Europe. America's greatest rose expert, Dr. E. W. Lyle (he supervises 3,000 acres containing 20 million rose bushes) says flatly that trenching is waste effort. He recommends instead that roses be planted in beds elevated slightly, if natural drainage is poor. Try this in your fall planting this year.

To pot

Petunias are one of the last summer flowers to be killed by the frost. You also can root cuttings from favorite petunias now in moist sand indoors and enjoy petunias as a pot flower indoors through much of the winter, if you have a sunny window.

Pool

Drain and clean your garden pool as soon as the tree leaves are all down and removed. Old leaves make unsightly stains on the pool walls and bottom.

Dig

It's time to dig gladioli, dahlias, and tuberous begonias. Don't wait until a hard frost hits, or the bulbs will be damaged. Light frosts kill the tops but don't hurt the bulbs.

Spread

Wood ashes from your fireplace contain much valuable potash which your plants can use. Spread over the soil directly, or add to your compost pile to hasten rotting of leaves in it.

Clover and bees

One popular bit of garden advice says clover in lawns means more bee stings for children. This past summer was extra good for clover, but our Joy never had a sting, although the lawn seemed half clover and was cut high. (We had an abundant clover bloom between mowings.)

Lily

If you like big lilies—really big blooms—try the new Olympic hybrids. I had several eight-inch blooms this year from bulbs planted last fall. It's still not too late to plant bulbs this fall.

DRY WALL CONSTRUCTION has proved satisfactory . . .

Says Carl G. Lans, Director, Technical Service Department, National Association of Home Builders

"When dry wall has once been accepted and gotten a hold, it has become general. The Washington, D.C., Metropolitan area is such an example. Before the war, everything was lath and plaster; now it is a rare thing in residential construction. Dry wall has proved satisfactory—not only because it is much more economical, but also because it produces a true, straight wall . . . and eliminates the introduction of many gallons of moisture into the house. In addition, it is a time saver."

For 32 years Homasote has been used for Dry Wall Construction—in millions of dollars of private homes. With Homasote Big Sheets, the average wall is covered with a single sheet; the walls are permanently crackproof, ideal for paper or paint and for modern mouldings and trim . . . Mail the coupon today for free literature on Homasote and allied products.

SAYS MR. WETWALL, "I wet and warp the studs in every house I enter. No wonder the owner has maintenance trouble and costs."

SAYS MR. DRYWALL (alias Mr. Homasote), "I keep the studs dry and straight and true. There's no cracked or falling plaster in my houses."

would use for lawns. Or you can buy an attachment that injects an especially potent liquid plant food into the water. The latter has the advantage that the sprinkler doesn't have to be left in place as long as if regular garden plant food (a much less concentrated form) is used. However, if you use "Ra-Pid-Gro" or a similar high-nitrogen plant food powder, this advantage does not hold.

WHY hasn't the fall fertilizing program—and its logical follow-up, the frequent-feed all year—been used before? Turf experts tell us they know of a few rugged individuals who have fed their lawn regularly until snow. (These people were trying to lick the crabgrass problem by heavy fertilizing designed to make the grass grow so luxuriantly that it crowded out the crabgrass.) But most people seem to think it silly to bother with a lawn in winter "because everyone knows that trees lose their leaves and lawns turn brown in winter." The few lawns that were fed did stay green many weeks longer than neighboring lawns, and, hearing of this, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL became interested in experimenting to see if lawns could be kept green all winter. They can, we discovered.

Then, following up recent farm research that corn and similar crops turn brown in the summer because of a temporary shortage of plant food in the soil and not because of drought or heat, we found that lawns will stay green all summer in most areas if they are fed regularly. Extra water is needed in unusually dry years, but no amount of water alone can keep the grass green. So don't waste time and money on watering a lawn unless you feed it regularly all summer.

Maybe you are wondering if this new frequent-feed system should be used for your trees and shrubs, too. Currently most trees and shrubs get only one feeding a year—early spring or late fall, depending mainly on the local fashion, since either time gives as good results. But don't feed your trees or shrubs in September or October. To do so invites trouble. Many of

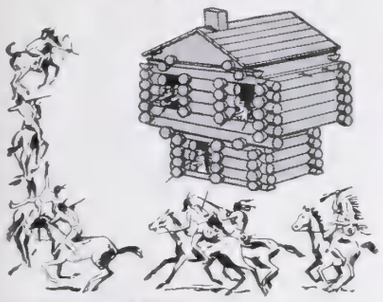
Hobgoblins can be helpful on Halloween

You needn't be bewitched, bothered, or bewildered on October 31st if you begin preparing for it now. Here's a plan to entertain the small fry and reap rewards for your town

by Doris Bernsley



UGLY witches on broom sticks, spitting black cats, goblins that get you, and ghostly ghosts have always been permitted one night of merry-making among us humans. That night is Halloween. No one begrudges simple pleasures, not even to supernatural spirits, but when they join forces with the little nippers in your community, their exhuberance very often gets out of hand. The occasion becomes a reign of terror. Door bells ring incessantly. Car windows are soaped. Garbage cans are overturned. Gates are lifted off their hinges. And, a number of other more ingenious, more costly capers are performed.

But you needn't be resigned to this annual fate. With some preparation you actually can charm the spirits and divert the small fry. The rich rewards will be worth their weight in any extra effort you expend. Here's how you can turn the traditional prank night into one that will benefit you and your community.

Adapt the traditional Halloween "Trick or Treat" tactics. Invite every child in your town to a party given in the school gymnasium. Admission price: staple goods which each child will be asked to collect by going from door to door. The child who collects the greatest number of food packages and tins to bring to the party will, of course, receive the reward. Then present the staples to your local needy charity. It may be the Home for Crippled Children, orphanage, or a hospital ward.

edly will prefer their own separate parties. The gymnasiums of each will provide an ideal solution to this social problem, though both parties can be basically the same. If the night is clear and not too windy, begin with group singing around a large bonfire in the yard. Then have all your young guests parade into the gym where the reward will be given and prizes presented for the most original or funniest costumes. (Who ever heard of a Halloween party without costumes?) Choose several groups to present frightening skits and fill in the remainder of the evening with games such as relay races for the younger boys and girls, square dancing for the older ones. There are dozens of square dance music records with calls you can probably borrow for the occasion. Refreshments could be a simple matter of cold cider, cookies, and apples—traditional Halloween foods for any age.

TO INSURE its success, make your preparations well in advance. Form a committee whose main functions will be publicity, entertainment, and raising the small amount of money needed for refreshments and decorations. Enlist the aid of individuals and your various community organizations such as the P. T. A., Junior League, Women's Club, or American Legion for funds. They may even want to help your committee plan the party. Be sure to promote the venture with as much publicity as possible. Contact your local newspaper and radio station so they can do an advance story about it. Contact the principals of your schools so notices are posted inviting each child to come with his staples. You might suggest that they sponsor a poster contest announcing the celebration, and arrange to exhibit the winners in local stores. Don't forget to have a truck ready October 31st for transporting the staples. And be sure to invite a reporter and a photographer to the party.

No matter how simple or elaborate your preparations may be, everyone in your community should have a happier Halloween.

The performance of this instant tarnish dissolver, Dip'N'Rinse, is almost beyond belief. It works its magic on all metals, solid or plated, except aluminum and pewter. It's safe for the finest silver and jewelry. Terrific for copper-bottom pans. You dip flatware right into Dip'N'Rinse; brush it on large pieces, door knobs, mountings, etc. (Won't harm the adjacent surface.) $1. Emery-Bird-Thayer, Kansas City, Mo.

Electromode's portable Automatic Heater is made-to-order for the needs of temperate climes, hard-to-heat rooms, rooms shy on heat provision. It's a self-contained, room-size heating system (13,660 b.t.u.) that you can move, as needed, to any room you equip with a 240-volt outlet. A silent fan quickly and widely disperses heat of the lifetime electric element. 4,000-W, $99.75; 3,000-W (10245 b.t.u.) $89.25, Carson's, Chicago.

This refuse-disposal unit is the most sanitary one yet. Easy to see why hospitals laud Rid-All. No pail cares, either. The bag (12 qt.) is odorproof and leakproof; lifts off hangers by its flaps for disposal. Metal shutters, operated by a capable pedal, keep it tightly closed. The refuse contacts no metal. Red, white, or yellow enameled base. $4.98 with 12 bags; 17 extra bags 50¢. Fitzgeralds, 545 Fifth Ave., New York.

This plastic-film crib has it all over the usual metal defrosting tray. Drip and ice can't bypass the barricade Less-Mess sets up. What's more, its easy-to-balance expanse and the firm grip its tubular aluminum frame affords, make sure the "defrost" load reaches the sink without mishap. Spring-action frame adjusts instantly from 12"x16" up to 19"x26". $2.25. Northmore's, Box 756, Highland Park, Ill.

You need no hands, no knob or pull, to open doors when the magical Tutch-Latch is behind them. A touch of your elbow, wrist, finger, or knee swings them open. Its service is priceless when your hands are messy, or you approach a cabinet or closet laden down. A terrific innovation for storage walls, too. The tiny latch bar screws to the cabinet; its catch hooks to the door. 3 for $2. Patterson Bros., 15 Park Row, N.Y.C.

BEFORE. You can see a magazine miser lives here! No doubt he has trouble finding what he's looking for in this ragged, unorganized pile. The trick is to figure out an efficient filing system for the wealth of information that's between the covers of each magazine.

How to keep a back issue from being a dead issue

by Carol A. Palmer

For years I clipped articles on how to live compactly in a small city apartment. Then, our tight little city life underwent a drastic change. We bought a large, sprawling, old farmhouse, and expansion, instead of compression, became our theme. To further change our viewpoint we added the titles of Mama and Papa to our names. All my treasured clippings were outmoded. But often, as I turned them over, I'd find the remnants of fascinating information on our present interests—remodeling, gardening, bringing up children.

So it was then we commenced to keep the entire magazine instead of clipping. However, this method eventually led to trouble also. One of us would remember a perfectly marvelous article on compost heaps, or fireplaces, and we'd rummage through a whole year's magazines hunting for it. Finally we hit upon a magic device to help bring order out of chaos. It took time to set up, but now that we do it month by month it's easy.

We clipped the contents page out of each magazine and pasted it in a looseleaf notebook. We used the sheet opposite to jot down notes on particular articles or ideas that we specially liked. Or, we starred the titles of certain articles. Now we are able to go through a whole year's collection of magazines in ten minutes, simply by turning twelve pages in our notebook. Magazines are stacked in order, spines outward, in cupboards below our bookshelves, key notebook on a shelf above. It's such a simple solution and we'd like to share this time-saver with all fellow members of "Magazine Hoarders Unlimited"!

AFTER. Clipping magazines is usually unsatisfactory. It's better to keep the entire magazine uncut and ready for easy reference. To save time and temper, stack them neatly away in chronological order, preferably in a closed cupboard that keeps them dust-free.

There are times when a magazine is worth its weight in gold—but it's a problem to know just what to do with it until that time comes

PHOTOGRAPH BY STAFFORD PALMER

The table of contents is the key to your filing system. Just paste contents pages, in order, in a loose-leaf notebook, starring anything that's special. Keep this notebook within easy reach on a bookshelf and you can go through a year's magazines in no time at all!

"Warmth of speech... without words" writes Eudora Welty about Heifetz

"At the miracles he works with the fingers of his left hand I can only marvel distantly. But through the dazzling magic of his playing glows the warmth of his love. And what an added blessing, when we are weary of all our own voices, to turn to this wonderful wordless sound."

The Man Behind The Hoe

COVER YOUR GARDEN FOR THE WINTER. Bare soil results in:

1. Puddling—poor tilth—makes your garden hard to work next year.
2. Loss of mineral nutrients by leaching.
3. Actual loss of soil by run-off or splash erosion.
4. Poor penetration of rainfall; thus poor sub-soil moisture.

If you didn't plant a cover crop earlier (there's still time in the South) spread leaves, crop residue, grass clippings, or straw over the surface of your garden and weight down with a scattering of soil to prevent blowing. Let's keep our soil and as much rainfall as possible by providing a winter garden cover.

FIRM-RIPE FOR COOKING. Good cooking apples should be firm-ripe. Mealy fruit lacks flavor and tends to mush up when used for pies or sauce. To keep apples firm, store in a cool place. Refrigerator temperatures are best for long periods of storage.

CIDER BLENDS. One of the secrets of good cider is to blend apple varieties. Particularly in the early fall it's best to use more than one kind and, if possible, use some late apples along with the early ones. Straight McIntosh or other early fall apples give a medium quality cider at best.

KEEP IT COOL. Cold temperatures are essential to keep cider fresh. If you prefer the tang that comes with aging, allow the fresh cider to remain at room temperature until just right—then cool quickly.

HOME CIDER PRESS. If you have more apples than you can use, small home cider presses are available. The younger members of the family will have a wonderful time making cider for their Halloween party.

OCTOBER REMINDERS: Where winters are cold: Bring in squash and pumpkins after the first light frost. Protect a few tomato plants from the first early frosts and then pick mature green fruit when a hard freeze is predicted.

Don't be in a hurry to harvest root crops for storage. They keep best in the garden and will not be injured until the soil freezes up.

Plant spinash, turnips and mustard for greens.

Where winters are mild:

Watch for turnip aphids. Dust or spray if they get a start.

Plant radishes now for pepped-up winter meals.

Harvest sweet potatoes before the vines are frosted.

Where winters are warm:

Seed cabbage and broccoli for a late winter crop.

Peas planted now may be ready for Christmas.

Check for Mexican-bean beetle on that fall crop.

Keep okra picked and it will continue to produce for some time.

STRAWBERRY CARE. If you pull and hoe young weeds in your strawberry bed this fall, spring care will be easier. Only the hardy species, such as the grasses, shepherds purse, chickweed, and winter cress (yellow rocket) need to be pulled. The summer annuals, such as ragweed, pigweed, and lambsquarters which sometimes germinate in the early fall will not survive the winter.

HALLOWEEN DECORATIONS. Last Halloween we were astonished to see a large, illuminated pumpkin jack-o'-lantern perched atop a neighbor's chimney. It didn't take long for the idea to catch on. There soon appeared two smaller jack-o'-lanterns, electrically lighted, hung in a tree. These pumpkin sculpturers carved the face, then opened the opposite side to remove seeds and insert an electric light. Stout twine was tied to the pumpkin stem and the lantern to a tree branch.

LONG JACK-O'-LANTERNS. Some weird jack-o'-lanterns may be carved from mature yellow summer squash that may not have been harvested at the right stage for culinary purposes. The shell is often very hard, so a sharp knife is needed for carving the face, but you'll find the interior flesh can be easily removed.

NUTRITIOUS BROCCOLI. We eat broccoli often at this time of the year when quality is at its very best. The children, even our two-year-old twins, have become very fond of this nutritious vegetable. Broccoli is higher in protein than many other green vegetables and an excellent source of vitamins A and C.

TASTY SAUCE. Del makes a tasty sauce for broccoli (it's good on green beans and asparagus, too). Here's the recipe (pilfered from her kitchen notebook):

One cup medium-thick white sauce. Add two-thirds cup sharp cheese, grated fine. Also a little salt and a generous dash of paprika for color. When this sauce is hot, pour over a well-beaten egg yolk and add a tablespoon of lemon juice. Return to heat for a minute or two, beating hard all the time. Chopped parsley or your favorite herbs add piquancy.

How to keep from collecting antiques

by Solange Strong

THERE are two kinds of people in the world: those who fall for antiques and those who don't. If the first antique you buy is an old butter mold, and the second antique you buy is an old butter mold, watch out. You're living in modern times, and you're well on the way to becoming a specialist.

You'll soon be having shelves built on the stair landings to accommodate all the other butter molds you're going to buy. You'll spend all your spare time dusting them and sorting them according to pattern and, incidentally, persuading yourself that the display is very attractive. Well, if not attractive, at least interesting. Well, interesting to you, anyway. Everybody should have a hobby (you say).

The best place to stop is after the first butter mold. Admit you're a dilettante. You can have a lot of fun that way. Take the butter mold into the kitchen. Scrub it clean and run cold water over it. Then mold the margarine with it immediately. By arranging a little water cress around the finished product, you have something in the party line. Butter molds were really used once, you know. They were meant to make butter attractive to the eye, and they still can if given the chance.

On the other hand, if you've already bought that second butter mold, all is not lost. You can take out the plungers and use them for tie-backs on calico curtains. But that's another story.

Believe it or not, almost every antique can still be used for its original purpose and be charming about it, too. Original means original. Leave that old pewter coffee pot which has been converted into a lamp to the decorators. They need the business. Suppose you polish up a similar pot and use it for coffee. You'll knock your friends cold with envy.

And speaking of coffee, have you ever had it ground fresh from the bean in an old hand grinder two minutes before brewing? Do you have to turn that grinder into a lamp and keep cigarettes in its drawer? Of course not.

Be practical! You'll be different. There's enough ivy and geraniums growing out of old knife boxes. Use them for knife boxes, and set the table from them. They'll save steps and a lot of silver dropping. Put them on the buffet table and let your guests help themselves.

The old cheese box will hold cheese even better than knitting. All kerosene lamps don't have to be electrified. Try burning kerosene in one of them. The light is as mellow as candlelight and sets the glamour spot for evening conversations, not to mention an unexpected power failure. You'll get credit for being imaginative when you're really just brave enough to be prosaic.

Did you know that an antique cradle was positively made to hold a baby, and not all those magazines we find in it nowadays? It's perfect for the first six months, and rockable. Rocking may not be scientific, but it's fun for the baby and fun for you, too.

The most impressive modern bar we've ever seen is equipped entirely with old whisky bottles of the last century instead of fancy decanters. Who would ever suspect that old whisky bottles might still hold spirits? All they require are new stoppers. Try it!

That milk-glass pin tray used for calling cards is really much handier on the dressing table with guess what in it? Yes! Pins! The ironstone soapdish, as a soapdish, provides a very sophisticated touch to the modern bathroom. It doesn't have to be used for cigarettes. The Pennsylvania Dutch flour crock with the blue bird on it can still hold flour and "send" the cook at the same time.

Now about the old cobbler's bench that's being used for a coffee table—run out and find an old cobbler, and give it to him!

GARDEN BOOKS WORTH READING

Home Orchid Growing, by Rebecca T. Northen; Van Nostrand; 1950; $6.

This is the third good book on home orchid growing to appear in as many years. This is as it should be. Orchids have lost the air of mystery that the few successful growers managed to surround them with by refusing to share their experiences and observations. Mrs. Northen is overly kind when she uses these secret-hoarders as "confused." No part of American horticulture has been as tight-lipped as the orchid growers. Today, thanks to the American Orchid Society, this is no longer true. Anyone can join the society and obtain their helpful publications. Books like Home Orchid Growing, Professor Watkins' ABC's of Orchid Growing, and Logan and Cosper's Orchids Are Easy To Grow result.

Mrs. Northen's book is best when she tells of her personal experiences.

"Orchid growing has been an adventure. This field of wonders opened itself to me bit by bit, and each new thing learned about the care of the plants and their fascinating history gave me a sense of achievement. Most wonderful was the discovery that orchids are just plain plants. Their requirements differ only slightly from those of other plants. And for learning their few simple needs I can have these exotic things from the tropics of the world all in my own backyard. They even make themselves at home in the house along with ordinary house plants."

Woven through the personal story is a mass of basic information about all kinds of orchids and how to grow them. The photographs are well chosen, but the book jacket is overly expansive when it says, "112 photographs made especially for Home Orchid Growing." Almost one-half the pictures were loaned by commercial sources, as were all eleven color photographs.

Garden Facts and Fancies by Alfred Carl Hottes; Dodd, Mead & Company, New York. $4.00

"Unique" is the best way to describe this book. Unlike most other garden books—in fact, unlike most others even by the same author, it is an assemblage of interesting facts, philosophies, and tidbits brought together nowhere else.

It is a thought-provoking book. It opens one's eyes to the wonder of the world about him. He describes the dainty, sensitive plant which closes its leaves when touched, and the venus flytrap that clasps its leaves shut on hapless insects. He asks what makes the gas plant give off an inflammable substance and the butterwort roll up its leaves when insects alight on it. He describes how a wise Providence has fashioned plants to scatter their seeds, some by catching on passing objects, others, by dropping them in water, and still others by popping them out, sometimes as far as 40 feet.

Not only are the facts he brings out interesting, but he handles them in a most entertaining manner. He tells about the rafflesia, the greatest of all flowers, but which has no stem or leaves, and the giant victoria, capable of supporting 200 pounds on its floating leaves. But he does it in a way that is not textbookish. It is a volume you can pick up, read a short while, and then put down again without losing your place or train of thought.

In other parts, he waxes philosophical, thereby giving an insight into his own character as well. He says it is not so much what we read that is important but what the author inspires us to think about. Then he quotes Lin Yutang saying, "So often people are like blotters, soaking up anything—blots as well as wise words. How much more it is to be a pen which writes words which may burn the page or send the reader to another world of delightful vistas of thought and action."

In still other places, he preaches brief sermons, telling the story of three men in the woods, the practical man who thinks only of what he can do with the lumber, the scientific man who wants to know the why of everything, and the emotional man who sees only the beauty of the surroundings. But, we must aim to be all three, to lead a full and useful life.

Again, he has a religious turn of mind, telling of the plants of the Bible, listing the flowers of the Saints, and quoting related stories. He delves into history, quotes legends, describes the trials of the plant hunters, reprints choice pieces of poetry, and tells his readers how to have fun with fruits and flowers.

All in all, it is a good bedside book. It is entertaining reading, full of interesting and important facts, but it is more than that. It is an expression of the man. It is Alfred Carl Hottes himself.

Singleton Copley, craftsmen like John Coney and Paul Revere, and the designers of early American tools and utensils. It "came of age" several times in the Nineteenth Century in romantic painting and the painting of American landscape, in the Shaker community crafts, and in the great architecture of Louis Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright.

Today American art is coming of age again. But in our new maturity we recognize ancestors mature in their own day. Our contemporary search for design quality in the basic shape of the object and in unadorned surface finds a beacon light in the community folk art of the Shakers. We find in the Shaker style a purity of form untrammeled by tacked-on decoration. But in spite of its austerity, Shaker design has a reserved warmth and a freedom from dogmas of style—qualities which we accept as profoundly American.

The Pennsylvania Dutch and the Spanish Colonials with their feeling for surface and pattern and the free use of bright color in articles of everyday use also have a good deal to say to us. One thing of inestimable value, which we find in folk art, is the ability to embody the private vision of the artist in the public forms of everyday use.

The folk art of America as it has developed throughout our history is undeniably itself, and at the same time it is also a forerunner of many elements in contemporary design. The American Style of today draws nourishment and refreshment out of these rich sources of our past, and discovers in material which is eternally the same, forms which are eternally fresh and new.

This door of a painted chest found in New Mexico reminds us that the Spanish Colonials, with their feeling for surface and pattern and bright color, have a good deal to say to us still. From the Index of American Design at the National Gallery of Art.

What is folk art?

If Holger Cahill's article on page 138 has whetted your interest, read what other authorities have to say about our American folk art —what it comprises, how it came into being

The following are excerpts from a symposium published recently in the magazine Antiques:

"American Folk Art might be defined, I think, as the naïve expression of a deeply felt reality by the unsophisticated American artist. By 'naïve expression' I mean that the pictorial or sculptural forms which the artist uses are uninfluenced by traditional styles. By 'a deeply felt reality' I would imply that our folk art is primarily realistic in intent but that it is inspired by an emotional rather than a visual realism—that it seeks the essence of a subject as the artist understands it rather than the outward form. Finally, I have used the word 'unsophisticated' instead of 'untrained' or 'unskilled' because much of the art which we generally accept as belonging to the folk tradition is the work of highly skilled men trained in various crafts . . ."

—John I. Baur,
Curator of Paintings and Sculpture, Brooklyn Museum.

". . . one might say that folk art is child art on an adult level . . . The folk sculptor turns the facts of nature into patterns . . . Folk carving . . . occasionally reverts to earlier styles, and accepts only as much representation as it can utilize for its own purpose."

—Erwin O. Christensen,
Curator of the Index of American Design.

"Folk art, at first unorganized, finally became an organized effort on the part of the 'have-nots' to convert luxuries into staples, for and by themselves. . . The eternal attempt to convert luxuries into staples rests upon a basic desire to acquire position and possessions. This desire, plus freedom to do, opportunity, and desire for religious and political liberty, caused thousands of Europeans to come to colonial America. Here, almost at once, they made an organized effort to produce things within the category of converting luxuries into staples. The success of this Republic is based on the mass production of things . . . The folk art of America is essentially the beginning of mass production. . . We might give what we call folk art a more appropriate name if we called it minor art for the people."

—Carl W. Drepperd,
Author of American Pioneer Arts and Artists.

"To me, American 'folk' art most accurately explains the character of the material and the people who produced it. ('Folk' in this country does not denote 'peasant.') Basically, American folk art was the art of the middle class—kindred folk with a kindred philosophy. . . American folk art developed logically as an authentic expression of the community for the community, in contradistinction to the established art of the few for the few . . . the large mass of settlers had a rugged task to perform. In their new environment, they were forced upon their immediate resources, combining the limited materials with amazing ingenuity in building simple homes and creating the objects for their daily use. Always, use was the primary motivation. Style was dictated by need, but inevitably the creative impulse managed to merge."

—Edith Gregor Halpert,
Director of The Downtown Gallery.

"American Folk Art—the art of the common man—represents the most purely native and the most independent and democratic tradition in early American art. . . Folk art is not significant in proportion to its early date. The most noteworthy body of folk art was produced around the middle of the Nineteenth Century. . . The vitality of design rather than technical proficiency determines the aesthetic validity of an example of folk art, for rtist works from insight rather eyesight, creating from within r than recording the surface arance of what he saw. The characteristic of American art is original, stylized design r than illusionistic realism, an able and unself-conscious re- of the personal, unacademic ach of the folk artist."

Don't let your slope run down to the house—and fill your cellar with water every time it rains. Dig the bank away and use the fill to raise the level around the house. This way you get a flat area right outside your door and the water runs away from your house. Then put up a wall to hold the bank. You can plant between the stones or, if it is cemented, you can make a flower border in front of it.

If you must

Another way to handle a change of grade is to construct two walls. This saves building one over five feet high. Too high a wall overpowers a small house with its size. It must also be much thicker and stronger than a lower one. With two walls you can use the lower for a seat and an eye-level flower border—one that doesn't need bending to weed or water, brings flowers up where you can appreciate them.

ou can save a lot of filling by changing your grade. A stone retaining wall, e the one above, allows for a grade change in two directions at once. One a sudden drop-off. The other a gradual slope by tapering the wall. You an also use steps to conceal a drop in levels. On one side the wall can lower than the other without its being obvious. Garden of E. E. Earle.

Here's how to do it with the least effort —and give yourself a maximum of outdoor living space with a minimum of upkeep

anks hold a bank just as well as stone. Treated with wood-preservative, dwood or cypress will probably outlast you. Even if you can't lift rocks, u can probably handle planks with a little help. Set the posts in concrete r stability. You can take care of excess water with a blind well—a hole ed with stones and a pipe leading from the surface.

our woody plants actually are of doubtful winter hardiness. They survive all but unusually severe winters unless they happen to make new shoot growth in the fall.

Fall fertilizing can cause such growth. It remains soft, succulent and active until a sudden temperature drop kills it. There is no chance for such shoots to "harden" as normally occurs when the tender new summer growth gradually matures and the leaves fall. Delay fertilizing until October—November for really doubtful material.

Evergreens, however, must go into the winter with a full supply of plant food and a moist soil. To be sure, feed and water your evergreens in October and November. You will not only prevent winter injury but you will keep a better green (some varieties of evergreens hold their color better than others, but all are helped by winter feeding and watering). A root feeder that attaches to your garden hose (automatically adding plant food to the water) does this with a minimum of fuss. There are several of these on the market now.

So, to keep your garden green all winter, fertilize twice this fall—early this month and again next month. Do a complete job—lawn, evergreens, trees, and shrubs. Hold back the browning of winter by fertilizing.

Gardens of China by Osvald Siren; Ronald Press Company, New York. $30.00.

Distinctly a book for the collector, architect, artist, and landscape architect—it bridges the gap between Chinese art, history, and landscape architecture in a way that is unique. The workmanship is superb, particularly the 200 or more plates which were printed in Sweden. In fact, the entire back half of the book is made up of these plates which demonstrate more clearly than words the points brought out in the text.

They show how water is used to create a multitude of effects. How trees are used to create shadows, fragrance, and symbolism, or to portray clouds across the sky. The use of stones is described and exemplified by striking photograp The author's thorough understa ing of Chinese art is shown by way he weaves the architectu features into a pleasing whole w all the other factors mentio above. In addition are such util rian portions as numerous patte for gates, grills, and walks.—E.I

In fact, e Museum's objective is to enable collectors, in time, to ve a "complete Museum of Art in miniature in the home."

Short of guided visits in the Museum itself, under instruc-on and over a long period, no more thorough and no more teresting way has ever been devised of providing a complete ucation in the entire history of art.

YOU WOULD LIKE SUCCEEDING SERIES – simply indicate ur wishes on the coupon. The Museum has in preparation s of Miniatures (24 each, with Album) on the following bjects: 20th-Century American Painters, Chinese Art, ench Art of the 19th Century, Paintings of the Early enaissance, Paintings of the Late Renaissance and Art of e Middle Ages. Portrait of the Artist

THIS PROJECT was first begun by The Metropolitan Museum of Art, experimentally, in December, 1947. The Museum found itself unequipped to handle the details involved, and therefore requested the Book-of-the-Month Club, of New York, to act as its national distributor. The selection of subjects and the preparation of the color prints remain wholly under the supervision of the Museum. All matters having to do with distribution are handled by the Book-of-the-Month Club.

ALL MINIATURES ARE OF THIS SIZE — IN FULL COLOR

Lightolier performs new lighting wonders to complement the trend to more casual, comfortable, colorful living.

These new Americana Lightoliers (and there are many more than those illustrated) combine an authentic American feeling with a new scaling for today's smaller rooms and lower ceilings. Choose yours in just the metal and color combinations that accent your bright, new furnishings and add a joyous note of charm, cheer and distinction to your home. Almost all Americana Lightoliers offer the new 3-stage lighting to enhance and dramatize your every room.

See the wide variety of Lightoliers at your furniture, department or electrical store or through your architect, decorator or electrical dealer at Lightolier Galleries, 11 East 36th Street, New York; 1267 Merchandise Mart, Chicago; 12th at Folsom, San Francisco.

Exciting, new lamps that obey your every whim

...lamps with such flexibility that you can focus light where you want it instead of being a slave to your old-fashioned lamp. With one group, you can raise your lamp or lower it, tilt it or twist it—up, down or sideways—adjust it for armchair or desk.

With another you can highlight a prized possession or cast a subdued beam for television reception—or do both at once. There are a myriad of possibilities with these magic LIGHTOLIERS. They're functional—yet so handsome and practical the Museum of Modern Art selected them for "Good Design."

If your preference is for the traditional, there are many other Lightoliers, authentic in design, yet delightfully fresh in their new approach to period decor.

Before and After—Ever After

There are ways, they say, to combine housework and beauty. All you need is a schedule—but then try to follow it!

by Katherine Elizabeth Fite

I DON'T want to be the life of the party. I don't care if I never make a dramatic entrance at the Stork Club. I don't want to be president. I do not care if I never win the blue ribbon for my chocolate cake at the county fair. The list of things I do not care if I never achieve would, if properly recorded, stretch from Hog's Gap, Texas, to Buckingham Palace—a long way both geographically and socially.

But there is one thing I covet: A combination housework-and-beauty schedule that I can follow. I want to cold-cream my face right at the precise moment the schedule says I should cold-cream my face, all the while planning the evening meal and quoting at random from Mr. Shakespeare's sonnets. I want to see my waistline shrink as I mop the kitchen floor at 11:26 o'clock. I want to lie down at 3:20, swathed in witchhazel pads and a pleasant aura of Chanel No. 5, and awaken at 4:01 to find the lemon pie, which I whipped up at 3:18, ready to take from the oven.

For years now I have devoured avidly all articles on strong-minded characters who overcame any and all obstacles to achieve their goals. Books of pioneer life and the struggle to maintain that life draw me like a magnet. Movies of that type I never miss. I'm a breathless listener to conversations composed largely of tales of hardship and how the victims won out without ever a thought of giving up the whole thing as a bad job.

Which brings us to the beauty articles. Ah, yes. If you cannot go to the salon for these treatments, you can make your housekeeping a beauty routine. I can? But then the beauty-writer didn't mean me. Not really! She knows my type. I'm the one who won the dean's prize in English Composition—and then spilled my tea in the dean's lap.

No. I've tried beauty routines and—"But I must have some red blood in my veins," I tell myself with scarcely a trace of doubt in my voice. "If Grandma could go from Tennessee to Texas in a covered wagon, surely I can do this." So I try again.

Almost all beauty articles begin, and logically enough I suppose, with hopping out of bed. The articles' hopping schedules are always timed for an hour later than I usually hop. To be absolutely frank about the whole thing, I rarely hop. An alarm clock doesn't bring out the best in me. No, I crawl. And while I'm crawling, I'm not disposed to quote poetry or think pleasant thoughts. I just crawl, hoping the contact between my bare feet and the cold floor may galvanize the rest of my body into something resembling action. I do not berate myself for this innate reluctance to hop. Some people may hop. I do not, and that's all there is to it. Nor do I question the authority of the beauty writer who recommends hopping. It is the schedule which follows this before-dawn leapfrog activity that leaves me frustrated and frightened. It is strictly the time element that throws me into confusion and a state of general weariness, for after hopping out of bed come 15 minutes of body-beautifying exercises.

In articles, in books, and in movies, one is given a momentary picture of the Determined One rolling from side to side with great abandon, bending, kicking her feet in the air. One may even get a fleeting close-up of perspiration rolling briskly down her face. All of this in about three seconds' reading or looking time.

Sometimes our heroine is pictured mopping under beds, thus making the bending exercises serve two purposes. And a very satisfying picture it is. In real life, however, the time element is different.

The directions say Place a mat on the floor. Just that. A mat? Now, where will I get a mat? Up in the attic, of course, are the children's camp blankets. They will do. I puff noisily up two flights of stairs, then back down again—I forgot the key to the attic—and up once more. I struggle with the chest where the camp equipment is kept, and, finally, I put my hands on the blankets. Tra. la. la! I lug them downstairs, spread them on the floor, and collapse in the center of them, utterly unable to move a muscle. And 10 of my 15 morning-exercise minutes have gone. Pfft!

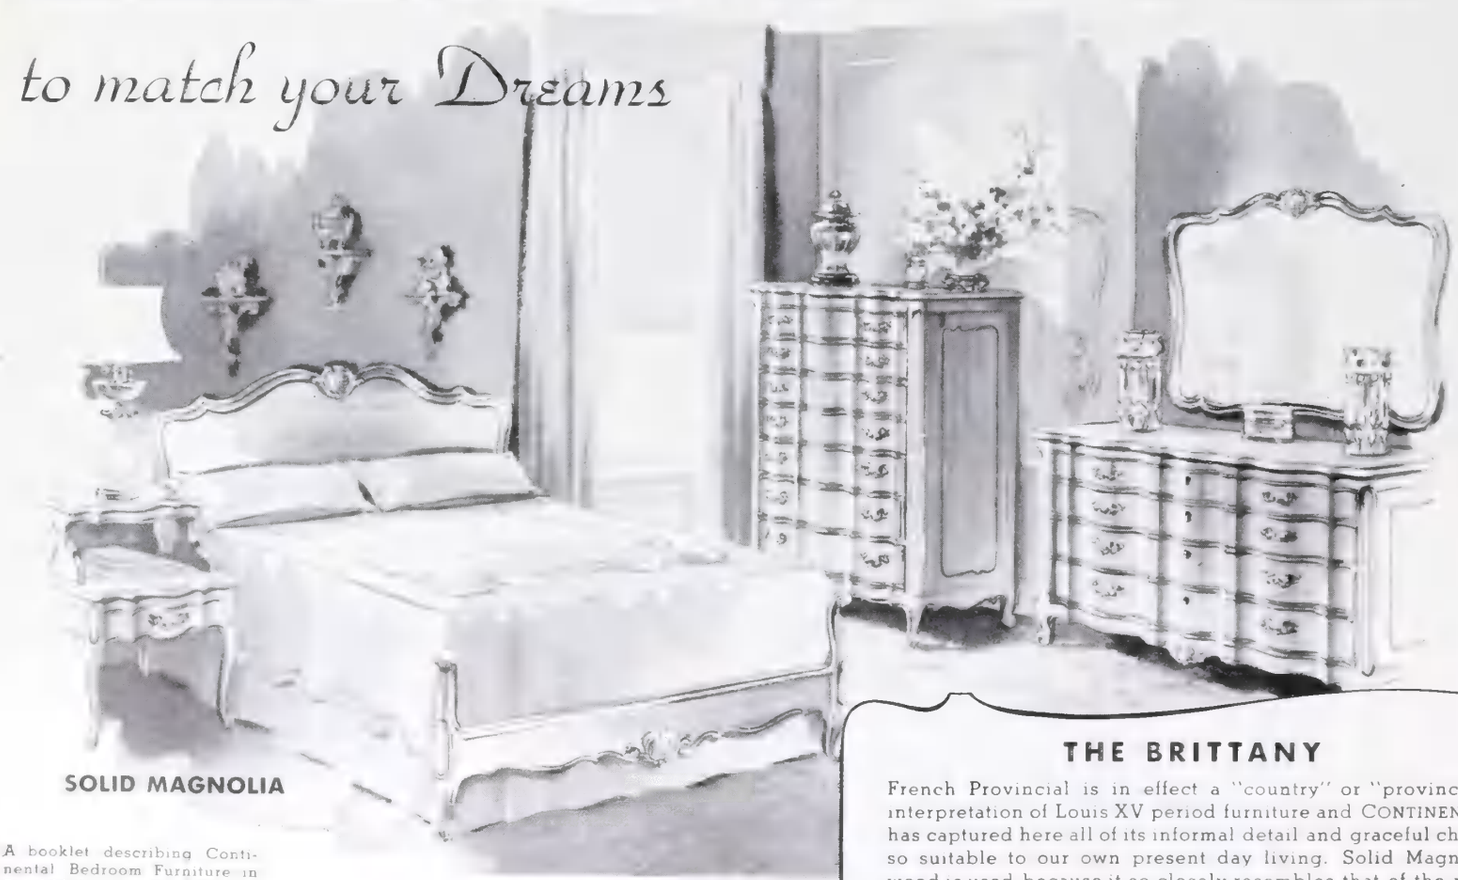
Just as I am about to hoist, with great effort, one of my leaden feet skyward, the door opens. One of my sons sticks his head in the door and shouts:

"For the love of Pete—whatcha doin'?"

I spend a necessary second ordering him to knock on my door before he enters and in telling him where his clean shirts are, which was what he wanted in the first place, and then I spend a few seconds more telling him: "No, I did not fall and nothing is broken—yet."

Ho, hum. The exercise time is over. Now, according to the rules, I must shower, dress myself in a pretty housecoat, powder my nose, put on some lipstick, and go to the kitchen to prepare a dainty breakfast.

No set of rules has adequately coped with the next situation: My husband bangs on the bathroom door. "I've got to shave!" he roars. "How am I going to get to the office if I can't get in the bathroom?"



With a great show of early-morning patience, I suggest that he use the boys' bathroom.

"They're in there." And his use of the word 'they' would indicate Coxey's Army, rather than two small boys, had camped in the other bathroom. But I will admit that three are a crowd, and especially in a bathroom, so without the shower, without the powder on my nose, and without lipstick, I hurry down to prepare the dainty breakfast. Dainty! Hmm!

The family off for their various destinations, the youngest to the play-pen in the back yard, I refer again to my beauty schedule: With brisk, unwasted movements it should be possible to make the beds, wash the dishes, give the house a rapid dusting-and-mopping, and make the shopping list—all in an hour's time. Thus, by nine o'clock the housewife is ready to dress and to do her morning shopping.

It is quite plain the beauty authorities haven't shopped in our village for some time. If the good housewife is not in her place in line at nine o'clock, her family will fast that day.

"Well," me thinks, "I'll reverse the schedule. I shall shop first, straighten the house later. I'll walk to the grocery store. But of course! Nine blocks! On these walks, the schedule instructs, carry yourself like a queen—shoulders back, head up, with your arms held gracefully and without tenseness. Now, that is comparatively easy on the trip to the store. It is, at least, until one of my neighbors catches up with me. "Is your back bothering you again, Alice?" she asks. "Or have you just got a stiff neck?"

When I explain about the beauty schedule, she says tactfully. "Well, maybe you haven't practiced enough yet!"

On the way home it is quite impossible to walk like a queen or even with my chin up. I have to use my chin—and, every two or three steps, my knee—to keep the two huge paper bags from sliding down over my stomach.

While I sit in the kitchen a moment to get my breath, I look at the schedule just once more. Now, it seems, with the house reasonably straight and the grocery shopping done, is the time for special work—light laundry and/or gardening. But due to circumstances beyond my control (forgive me if I am beginning to sound like a congressman) the house is not straight. "Hi, Seabiscuit," I shout cheerily to my reflection in the hall mirror.

It really doesn't take too long to make the beds, mop and dust, gather the laundry and count the pieces, chop vegetables for a congealed salad for dinner, and wash the breakfast dishes. No, not too long. At any rate, it won't take so long that I'll be eligible for an old-age pension when I'm finished.

In the middle of the dishwashing, the telephone rings twice, the door

SILLY PUTTY. We tried and tried to illustrate this for you, but finally our sweet, untemperamental photographer got slightly silly himself. Silly Putty is plastic madness. You roll it around in the palms of your hands until it becomes a ball. You drop it on the floor and it bounces higher than a rubber ball. Stretch it quickly and it breaks—slowly, and it pulls like taffy. Hit it with a hammer and it shatters like glass. Lay it over your funny paper and it picks up the print perfectly. Let it alone and it melts into a tired little puddle. I brought some home to my grown-up husband and he's silly about it. Nor does it startle me any more when he rolls it into a ball and bounces it off the opposite wall while he's reading in bed. A plastic eggful is $1 postpaid. Silly Putty was born at, and comes from The Block Shop, New Haven 11, Conn.

MONOGRAMMED SHORTS. Superb shorts of Wamsutta Supersale come in either the Boxer or French back style, and if you give them to your husband he'll wonder if maybe you aren't the mink coat type. Monogram in any color. Shorts in white only. Sizes 30-44. $4.50 the pair; 3 pairs for $12.75. Add 25c post. Orders must be in by Nov. 25 for Xmas deliv. Franklin-Bayer, 630 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 11, Ill.

KISS-TIMER. Once the news gets around that you wear this pinned to your lapel, your telephone is going to get nervous hiccups from overwork. It's a tiny hour glass attached to a "kiss" pin, and when the sands of time run out—20 seconds—that's enough! But use it sparingly 'till someone comes along who makes the Kiss-Timer as disturbing as an alarm clock. Gold plated. $1.50 ppd. Gift Clues, Beacon, N. Y.

Have you heard what the GIRLS in the back room are saying?

Now...ALL-NEW MURRAY Matched Steel Kitchens

"So beautiful!"

Yes, every part of your new Murray kitchen...the marvelous cabinet sinks, the streamlined electric ranges or gas ranges, the spacious wall and floor cabinets... are all beautifully style-matched to form one harmonious picture. And there's an arrangement to suit your own special needs!

"So strong!"

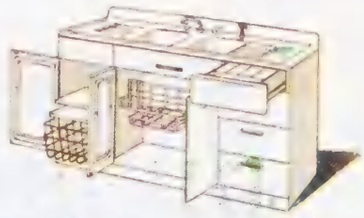
And why not... when all frames — ranges and cabinets — are made of welded steel! And to further assure you lifetime service, all sinks and ranges are covered with rich porcelain enamel... stain and acid resistant.

All cabinets are double-coated with highest quality hi-baked enamel . . . durable and pure white!

"So silent!"

All drawers on Murray cabinets glide on brass runners...for smooth, silent action. You'll like the solid feel of the doors, too...all sound-insulated! Spring-action catches never stick . . . chromium-plated hinges are small and easy-moving. As with the Murray ranges, all edges are rounded...everything smooth to the touch.

"So convenient!"



The cabinet sink above, being admired by the girls, has a two-level bottle or utility rack, five full-sized drawers, two cabinets, handy vegetable basket, breadboard, and cutlery tray! Units like this, combined with ranges with every modern convenience...will make your "kitchen-time" more of a pleasure-time!

Today, your Koylon Foam Mattress is another dream come true. Its rich luxury for deep, relaxing sleep can be re-enjoyed each and every night for years to come.

Now Koylon is made a New Way!

New Koylon Foam now brings you the most superb accessory to healthful repose each night. For new Koylon is buoyantly air-filled, with a greater area of ventilation. It's fluffier and softer, to support you in weightless, dreamlike suspension from head to toes as "nerves" and tension seem to "float" away. Because new Koylon is tougher and stronger, you can enjoy its blessings through many long years to come. Learn all about new Koylon at fine stores.

- Made in one complete piece—new Koylon has nothing to break apart or press into you.
- Double corings ventilate Koylon within and without—odorless, dust-free, sanitary.
- Exclusive damask cover is specially woven and treated so it won't shrink, creep or bunch. Stitched top and bottom, to hold true to mattress edges.
- Koylon foundation is reinforced hardwood with tempered steel springs, hand-tied 8 ways.

Highly-prized Song Birds, the majestic Wild Turkey and the fiery red Flamingo, generally considered to be Audubon's most brilliant paintings, can now be yours at an unprecedented low cost of pennies per picture. Complete set with portfolio only $1.98

At last—you can afford to own 16 of the greatest bird paintings ever created. MARBORO has just published, at an amazingly low price, a portfolio of Audubon Birds reproduced directly from the magnificent Elephant Folio engravings valued as high as $1500 apiece. Each large 8½"x11" plate is printed on fine, soft-textured, linen-weave sheets superbly suited for capturing the breath-taking, true-to-nature colors of the originals.

Audubon Birds — ideal gift for him or her
No gift could be more certain of a welcome reception than this portfolio of the BIRDS OF AMERICA hand-colored by John James Audubon. The 16 original engravings from which these prints were reproduced, and which they so closely duplicate, would cost more than $14,000 to purchase today.

Bow-tied portfolio with "Decorator's Mat"
Marboro brings you these 16 Audubon Birds in a novel, colorful, miniature artist's portfolio tied on three sides with removable ribbon. Included is a pre-cut "decorator's mat" in which you can insert each print to see how it will look when framed.

A hilarious combination! "Tipsy" the animated drink pourer fits any bottle . . . pours your drink from his own little bottle, while his street lamp lights up bright red and flashes the words "Say When"! There's room for you to pencil in your guest's name and drink on each glass . . . pencil marks can be easily erased. A perfect party suggestion!

I WAS LURED BY THE BEAUTY,
I PEEKED AT THE PRICE TAG, AND THEN...

I JUMPED FOR JOY! Here was just what I had been looking for . . . smart, Boltaflex-covered furniture to last for years . . . and at a price that pleased my pocketbook.

I looked at the range of rich decorator colors and patterns. I felt the soft warmth of the Boltaflex material. Who'd think you could afford them on a button-budget!

But Boltaflex beauty isn't just "skin deep." First of all, it's got the sweetest disposition. No matter how many times it's flexed, it pops right back to its original shape. Then, too, it's so easy to take care of . . . soap and water keep it clean as a whistle. What's more, Boltaflex won't chip or peel, and it resists staining, fading and scuffing!

Your favorite stores carry Boltaflex by-the-yard and feature Boltaflex-covered furniture. Look for the Boltaflex tag. It's your guide to the smartest styles at good old-fashioned prices.

Boltaflex sells BY-THE-YARD at all leading department stores. It is also available in SEALTUFT, the stitchless, quilted plastic. For further information, store names and descriptive folder, write Dept. H-511. BOLTA PRODUCTS SALES, INC., LAWRENCE, MASS.

Handmade of ceramic, they come in pink or gray with gold touches. $7.50 each, ppd. Hardie-Arnita, 475 S. Robertson Blvd. Beverly Hills, Calif.

HOME MAKERS

Homestead Provincial

was created to fit in with this trend, as well as with Early American, Provincial, English Farmhouse, Cape Cod, Swedish, Modern. Art direction by Allen & Shaw.

Unusual Shapes Homestead Provincial is based upon Early American folk art, and its charm comes from the fact that the shapes are similar to those hand crafted in pottery, tin, pewter, and wood. Note the cleverly simulated rivets.

SOOTHING

Doorbells made Grandpa
The grouch of the town
He met every caller
With a growl and a frown!

But door chimes by NUTONE
Are now on his door . . .
So Gramp's not the Grumpy
That Gramp was before!

Instead, he's a booster
To neighbors who call . . .
He shows off his NUTONE
THE BEST GIFT OF ALL!

"Glad I got rid of that four-alarm bell on my door," beams Gramp. "That kind of noisy racket is too hard on the nerves . . . makes you jump and scares you half to death."

NUTONE DOOR CHIMES are pleasant to hear . . . handsome to look at.

"That's why I put NUTONE CHIMES on top of my gift list," Gramp confides. "They keep on giving every day of the year."

Rasping, nerve-scratching doorbells have no place in today's art of gentle living . . . especially when NUTONE DOOR CHIMES are so reasonable in price—so easy to install.

You'll find 14 styles of NUTONE CHIMES to choose from . . . a style to suit the taste and budget of any home or apartment. Priced from $3.95 to $69.95. At leading hardware, electrical and department stores. Write for FREE circular.

How to leave home and like it

by Louisa M. Comstock

Dates and rates are changeable. Prospective tourists should confirm this information with their travel agents, transportation companies, or hotels

One advantage of driving to Arizona is the superiority of Arizona's motels, elsewhere called motor courts, tourist courts, and the like. Arizona, in fact, claims to have originated the motel. Such is her pride in it that she not only possesses an unusual number, but each new motel seeks to outdo the last in architecture, service, and extras, with most gratifying results to the traveler.

Around Phoenix alone, there are more than 350, almost all with elegant lawns, shuffleboard, horseshoe and croquet courts, sun decks and patios for sun bathing, and not a few with their own warm-water swimming pools. Others point with pride to incidental refinements like cactus gardens, aviaries, barbecue pits for outdoor steak fries, miniature golf courses, putting greens. At least one serves its guests breakfast in bed. If you wait until the peak months of February and March, of course, even this number may be filled. But if you go earlier, you may find a motel a pleasant way of settling in, learning your way around, and selecting how and where you wish to spend the bulk of your vacation. You may indeed find it so pleasant that you will look no farther, but make your motel headquarters for your entire stay. Phoenix Chamber of Commerce, which stands ready to furnish information about motels as well as other types of accommodation, quotes rates from $2 to $7 now, $4 to $20 during the peak season.

All this and Calypso, too

Here are some reasons behind the current enthusiasm for Jamaica, especially among people preferring a one-island Caribbean vacation. One is that Jamaica itself is diverse, made so by an unusually mountainous terrain, so that you can choose at will between seashore, inland and foothill resorts. Another is that Jamaica is unusually accessible, only three hours by air from Miami, a little more from New Orleans, and served regularly by at least three steamship and seven airlines. It is available all year round on those boons to the initiated, the package tours, through which air and ship transportation plus a variety of experiences ashore are most attractively combined. Moreover, Jamaica is so nice a cross between the strange and the familiar, the exotic and creature comforts, that it wears better, perhaps, than certain other Caribbean spots we can think of which are exciting at first experience but nothing you'd long to return to. Thanks to the altitude and the trade winds, you can rely on the climate all the year round. (Continued on page 265)

Reporting on a vital trend in American taste...

Naturalism

• in colors • in manners and behavior

• in forms and designs • in materials

What have you bought since the war? We wager your recent purchases in rugs, fabrics, wallpapers, and paints are nature-colored, or nature-textured, or patterned after nature forms. This is no coincidence. Millions of other people have felt the same way. For today's best sellers are all naturalistic—in color, form, and texture. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL says this is a long-term, vital style trend—not just a passing fad. Read how you happened to develop this taste preference, and how it affects your other ideas about better living.

by Jean Murray Bangs and Dr. Ralph Linton

Why have millions of Americans suddenly developed a taste for certain greens, browns, grays, and yellows? With no official dictum or promotion, no sanction but their own feelings, why are people all over the country filling their homes with the colors, materials, textures, and forms of nature? Why indeed? But first, the exact facts!

During the summer of 1950, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL editors gathered together the top "best-sellers" of the last two years in all types of home furnishings that use color, pattern, and texture. All price levels were researched—from the "completely mass" to the most high-fashion "decorator" types of merchandise. They found the best-selling items in all manufacturers' lines were invariably naturalistic in design.

The color palette found in all these best-sellers is made up exclusively of the colors commonly found in nature: soils, tree barks, plant leaves, wood tones, ferns, rocks, and grass. Flower colors occurred, but as a minority group, and then used only in small quantities for sparkle—in about the same small proportions as Nature uses flower colors. No strong, intense, or not-to-be-found-in-nature colors showed up as sales winners. Many were grayed and muted, and all color schemes combined the correct accent color, as nature commonly does it.

Even more interesting—the best-selling patterned fabrics used designs that realistically presented common nature forms: leaves, ferns, trees, flowers. And the textured fabrics that were best-sellers were so textured they reminded us of the coarseness of bark and rocks. And why not? They were even colored to resemble bark and rocks. So it was no surprise to find that the paints that people have been having mixed to their order should reflect this same naturalistic trend. Neither was it a surprise that the best-selling rug colors were such that they could be laid down outdoors and look completely at home there.

These findings were not a total surprise to the Editors, for they had suspected this might be the case. For naturalism is a very logical ingredient in the emerging American Style in architecture and decorating. But they asked us (as an architectural historian and as an anthropologist) to evaluate these findings in a larger frame of reference than as mere fashion. They suspected that these apparently (Continued on next page) random phenomena were neither random nor phenomenal, but part of a big, long cycle of social change, and that this evidence was only a small part of a bigger story.

This preference for "nature" colors (greens, browns, and warm grays—the color of leaves, rocks, soils and tree trunks) springs from a basic change in attitude about our homes.

Originally, our houses were designed almost solely for "protection against the elements." Now we endeavor to "bring the outdoors in," thanks to our vast progress in controlling weather and climate. As soon as wide openings and glass walls made the outdoors an actual or visual extension of the room, it was inevitable that there would be a demand for color harmony between the inside and the outdoors. You have only to look at the rash of picture windows that has broken out across the country to realize that the emphasis has changed—from keeping nature out to letting it in.

In the case of the city apartment, in which the room must turn in on itself because connection with the outdoors is physically impossible (as well as visually undesirable), nature colors seem to act as a psychological link between the room and the outside. They bring up memories and images of actual scenes.

"But can better heating plants and insulating glass produce a taste change?" you ask. Yes, indeed! Americans have always liked contact with nature. For the bulk of our population, nature is safely under control and we have nothing to fear from it. We consider ourselves a part of nature and, therefore, akin to it. We have never been afraid of it as in other societies, because our American world was born since mankind learned there is nothing supernatural about nature—nothing which the mind can't understand. Moreover, we Americans are constantly doing things to nature, instead of attempting to adapt ourselves to it as more primitive peoples do. We are constantly doing things to improve it (witness Climate Control in our houses, and our vast reservoir and irrigation projects).

Because of our attitudes, nature offers us peace, relaxation, and escape in an increasingly complex and competitive society. The present "liking" for nature in the decorative and architectural fields is an evidence of our friendliness to and respect for the natural world and its laws. This attitude is a basic part of our feeling about life. (It also accounts for our predilection for realism in painting.) (Continued on page 292)

A root from the High Sierras, polished by wind, sun and rain, makes an interesting piece of sculpture. We Americans feel more at ease with such art forms, because we do not worry about their meaning.

When our eyes get attuned to appreciating natural things, we find all kinds of beautiful decorative materials lying right under our hands, crying to be used. Every ingredient in this Honolulu lanai is a local, natural material. Equally handsome ones occur in every part of the United States. The trick is to see them.

Period	Architecture
1894-1918	Although period architecture was dominant, an indigenous modern architecture was developing . . . Rejecting traditional forms, it took principles of construction from natural objects, in which use determines form. The ideas behind it were expressed in the writing of Horatio Greenough, Louis Sullivan, Frank Lloyd Wright and Gustav Stickley. Leading architects of this minority group were H. H. Richardson, Sullivan, Wright and others of the group called "the Chicago School," Maybeck, Greene and Greene. This was the period of the California Bungalow and the Craftsman House. This era saw the start of such modernisms as built-in furniture, grouped windows, exposed construction, natural woods.
1919-1945	Period architecture was again dominant after the war. This was the heyday of Spanish, Tudor, Norman. It began to "peter out" with popularity of Colonial, whose simple forms paved the way for simplicity of modern. "Authenticity" was the standard of judgment. At the end of this period, popular architecture was dominated by Cape Cod and "ranch house" styles in some areas particularly. European Modern—The Paris Exposition, 1925, introduced the abstract ornament of "modernistic" which was the first modern European style to influence the U. S. In the thirties, both period styles and "modernistic" were successfully challenged by still another European style—called "The International Style." This style rejected the past, particularly in regard to ideas about nature and man. This "International Style" is the same the world over in minimizing the importance of the individual. It makes arbitrary form—not the principles of nature—the basis of design. Leading exponents of European Modern in the U. S. have been Neutra, Gropius, Mies van der Rohe, Breuer, Lescaze and Mendelsohn. American Modern—It all but went underground in this period—though Wright was carrying on, and a few men in the later half of the period (such as William Wurster, Gardner Dailey, Harwell Harris, Alden Dow and the Samuel Homseys) were pursuing their own course in developing American forms.
1946-1950	Outstanding development of this period is the emergence of "American Modern"—as differentiated from "European Modern" with which it was first confused. American Modern is the continuation and outgrowth of the indigenous American work of 1894-1918. It shows some influence of "European Modern," and it also reflects the changes (social and technical) in American life since 1918. Like the earlier work from which it derives, it is based on the importance of the individual. It takes its principles of construction from the integration in nature. It is not limited to any one particular form. Architects, whose work typifies this emerging style, are: F. L. Wright (whose work flows unbroken from 1894), William Wurster, whose work dates from 1924, Harwell Harris, whose work dates from 1934, and John Yeon, whose work dates from 1935. In addition, a younger generation of architects, such as John Funk, Hugh Stubbins, Robert Cerny, Joseph Esherick, and a still younger group, who were inspired greatly by Wright, are remaking the American small house. The materials, forms and colors of this revitalized American work are strikingly sympathetic to those of the 1894-1918 period.

AMERICAN MODERN

Our truly indigenous houses have always reflected our love of nature — by their form, materials and colors. But we haven't always built in the American style. Between World Wars I and II we were wooed by European influences. Now we are returning to the original values that gave birth to the American Style.

Two currents have always existed in American life. One has been based on native values; the other on imported ones. The form of the truly American house was based on a philosophy of design that used the principles of construction that underlie all natural objects: that use determines form. These houses also emphasized natural colors and materials, as well as a natural life. This type of design was increasingly important until 1918. After World War I, it received a set-back from imitative historic styles and the introduction of modern European design. Since 1945, a new American modern has been steadily emerging. Although showing modern European influences, it stems essentially from the indigenous American house of 1894-1918. This chart traces the relation of indigenous American design to both historic and modern imported styles.

Social Conditions	Materials	Forms	Colors
Reform (or "cozy radicalism") were the dominant notes of the period: movements for suffrage, prohibition, pure food laws, dress reform, fresh air, world peace and all varieties of political and social betterment, including architecture. The indigenous American house developed in conjunction with the emergence of the "new woman."	Natural materials were allowed to look natural. Synthetic and modern materials, like glass, were not used to imitate other things. Design emphasis was on materials which grow old gracefully. This was the time of mission furniture, "inglenooks," the morris chair, and a wide use of brass, copper, leather, and exposed wood.	Forms of indigenous American work were untraditional, but sometimes reminiscent of traditional ones, as this work was evolutionary in character and reflected change gradually. Emphasized horizontal lines, wide overhangs, close connection with ground. Forms were various, as designers felt the appearance of a building must express the use for which it was made.	Nature colors — especially the browns and greens of the forest. Exterior colors chosen to blend house into natural background. Interior colors chosen to create dignified, harmonious background for life. Colors chosen to age gracefully.
Early part of this period was typified by desire for Harding's "normalcy" and Coolidge's "prosperity" and the desire to preserve the status quo. With the depression, the dualism in American life becomes more pronounced. For now the American way was opposed by strictly revolutionary ideas—in social thinking as well as in design. Those revolutionary doctrines, which were wholly European in origin, never became integrated into the American culture.	Stucco most popular building material in English, Spanish and "moderne" houses. Emphasis on glass, metal and synthetic materials. Natural materials used to look "modern" instead of "antique." Design emphasis on modern technology, rather than on handicraft methods of handling materials. Metal tube furniture was very popular with the European modernists.	Period forms ran gamut of historical formulas. "European modern" forms reflected attempt to create a new aesthetic formula based on exciting new shapes and motion-patterns of the Machine — using flat roofs, pipe rails, ribbon windows, no applied decoration. In contrast to these types of design-by-formula, were natural forms of indigenous American design which grew directly from individual needs to be filled, materials at hand, nature of site.	"Painter's" colors instead of "nature" colors. White and pure blue, red and yellow predominated. These colors did not age gracefully. Different walls of same room painted different colors destroyed unity and continuity of form.
Changes producing centralization in government and emphasis on personal security instead of competition created an increasing need for the individual to express himself in his surroundings and possessions. Strong distaste for personal regimentation, prompted a turning to "unregimented" nature.	Wood, especially California Redwood, stone and glass became most popular building materials. Metal tubing furniture restricted to out of doors. Much integration of house structure with site.	Pitched roof, most popular. Shed roof showing more popularity than flat roof. Glass walls, wide overhangs. House has close connection with ground. Great development in the intimate relation of indoors and outdoors, producing new kind of outside living area. Increasing use of exposed construction which makes its own pattern, and of natural form.	Nature colors, lighter in value than those of 1894-1918, show popularity. Effort to harmonize interior colors with those of the landscape. Homemakers not afraid of color, but prefer the restfulness of subdued backgrounds, using intense color only as accent.

Naturalism is the core of the emerging American Style

On the next seven pages you will find color schemes, fabrics, furniture, and construction materials that show how naturalism looks in the flesh. It's the latest work of one of America's best designers, Edward Wormley. All these new pieces embody that realistic approach to today's living problems that is making American Modern a vital design force

At first glance, it may seem far-fetched to say that our national philosophy about life has anything to do with the designing of furniture. But if you think it through, you'll see that designing and philosophy are very much related—inseparably related.

In a capitalistic society, designers are really servants of the people, for, if their designs don't sell, they lose their clients who are the manufacturers. So their success is based on a two-fold ability. They must estimate accurately what the people want, or are going to want. Then they must be able to create the solution for that want. Months before they can put pencil to paper they have to be sniffing out the truth about people's attitudes and values. They have to be keenly sensitive to what people "set store by" or "can't abide." They have to be keen to pick up the scent—long before it has crystallized—that their public is experiencing a change of attitude about what's worth buying and worth bothering to maintain and keep up.

One of America's designers who has been most alert and sensitive to people's dissatisfaction with the performance of existing solutions in furniture is Edward Wormley. Year after year, he pioneers important improvements in performance. Always these solutions have a good-looking, suave, polished appearance—with the understatement that is the earmark of style in our decade, and with none of the faddish trickiness which often goes with the cult of functionalism. The new group for the Dunbar Furniture Company, shown here, is his most realistic and, we believe, his most brilliant collection. All the featured pieces here do something more, or solve some heretofore unsolved problem. He uses materials (particularly wood, micarta, cork, and plastic fabric) so the materials proclaim their own inherent nature. The total scene in every picture is nature-colored and nature-patterned. If you'd like to move into these rooms, you are running true to form—for this decade.

The maidless dining room has produced the nee for a more functional dining table. Here is an in proved, modern version of the old Lazy Susa Only this revolving area is made of heat-proo scratch-proof Micarta, and there is an electric h plate in the center to keep hot things hot. It puts ligh on the table, but the light does not shine in anyone's eyes, whether he be sitting or standin

How our manners produce new furniture

As our social forms and habits change, they call for changes in the performance of our furniture. So it is no wonder that changes like the rapidly vanishing formal dinner party, and the rising popularity of the buffet meal has produced a new, more realistic piece of dining furniture—the 4-in-1 buffet. It provides engineered storage for all the usual table setting appointments. But it also holds six folding tables, has full bar facilities, and houses two hot plates for food warming. Everything about this piece represents the fullest meaning of naturalism: (1) realistic performance, (2) fresh, honest use of materials that don't pretend to be something they are not, (3) good American walnut with a dull, rich finish that won't show scratches as readily as the old shiny finishes. This kind of furniture makes excellent sense, the kind of sense that is the core of the Emerging American Style. Such realism is producing a new American Modern.

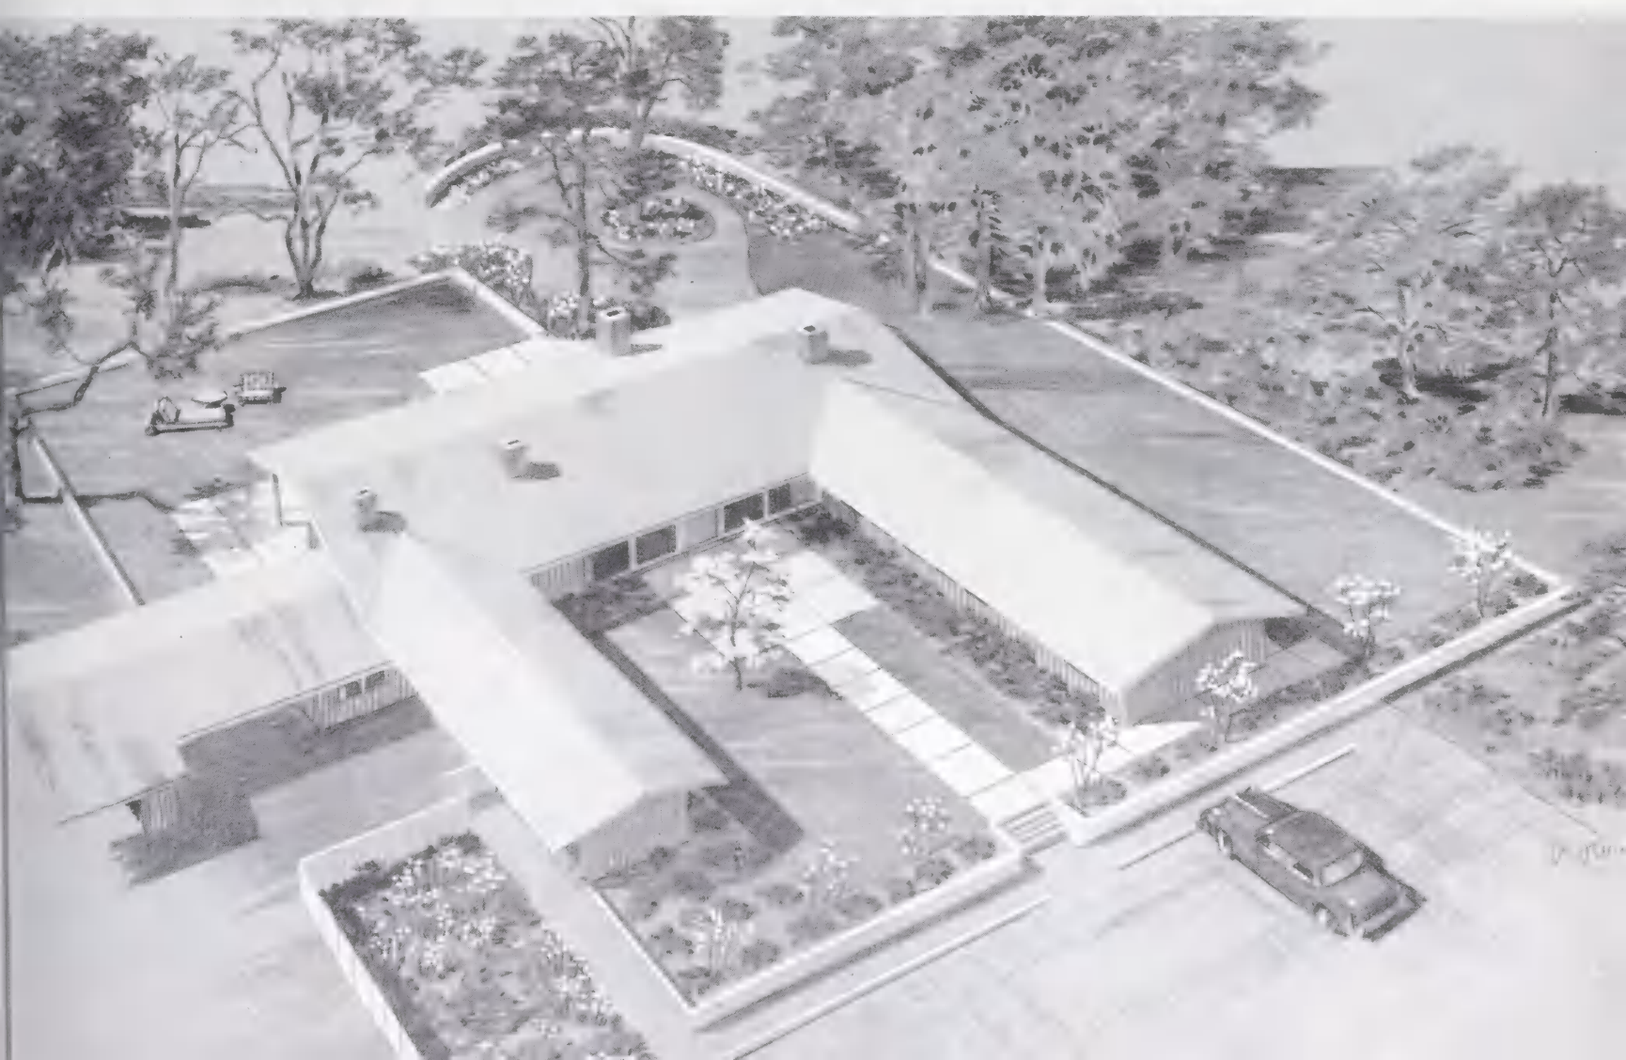
Because the American Style has nothing to do with "period", it readily combines THE BEST OF PAST AND PRESENT

by Mary Roche

Some features of this house are older than they look. Others are modern despite their age. But the combination is modern because it fits our way of living



You can't put dates around the American Style. You might say it started in 1950, but as long as our society continues to live and grow, you can't date the end of our Style. It has nothing to do with period in that sense.

You can't define the American Style by shape or line. No cabriole legs or dormer windows label it as "period" in that sense either. (Above all, it is not a rehash of "Early American!") Nor do arbitrary devices, like hairpin metal legs or stark white walls, label it as "Modern." (Continued on next page)

PLAN BY SIGMAN-WARD

Unusual arrangement of traditional U-shaped plan and modesty of main entrance tell you this house was designed for owners' enjoyment. Note there are two master dressing rooms, no dining room.

The American Style is modern because it has grown out of our way of life and our technology.

But wait a minute! How many of the things we call modern today are truly modern in point of time? Just look at this house with its travertine floors and wood-paneled walls. Everyone calls them modern, and so they are—satisfying answers to our modern demands for easy-to-care-for houses. But their origins go back centuries.

By the same token, many of the old things continue to fill modern needs. A Queen Anne armchair is still a comfortable "occasional" chair. A Franklin stove still burns a merry fire and a wide-lipped scuttle pours out the coal very nicely

They all go together naturally. For the American Style is not tied up with clichés of past or present. It mingles the best of both.

This easy-to-maintain tanbark garden may not proclaim itself as "Modern," but it is an eloquent expression of the American Style. Planted with azalea and fern, it forms a visual transition from sleek terrace adjoining house to natural rusticity of oak grove beyond.

Platform on which Shainwald house is built extends behind living room to include terrace and lawn, thereby emphasizing modern indoor-outdoor relationship. How readily large glass areas combine with low sloping roof—long a part of the American architectural idiom.

If you removed all the furnishings, this living room with its large glass areas and travertine hearth would be labeled advanced modern. But see how readily the old pieces fit into the modern background when style dogmas are ignored and focus is on comfort.

Cedar paneling and travertine floors throughout living area and bedroom wing provide a continuity of background which is essentially modern. But that doesn't rule out antique accessories. See how woven reed curtains diffuse the north daylight in the front hallway.

Can I build in 1951?

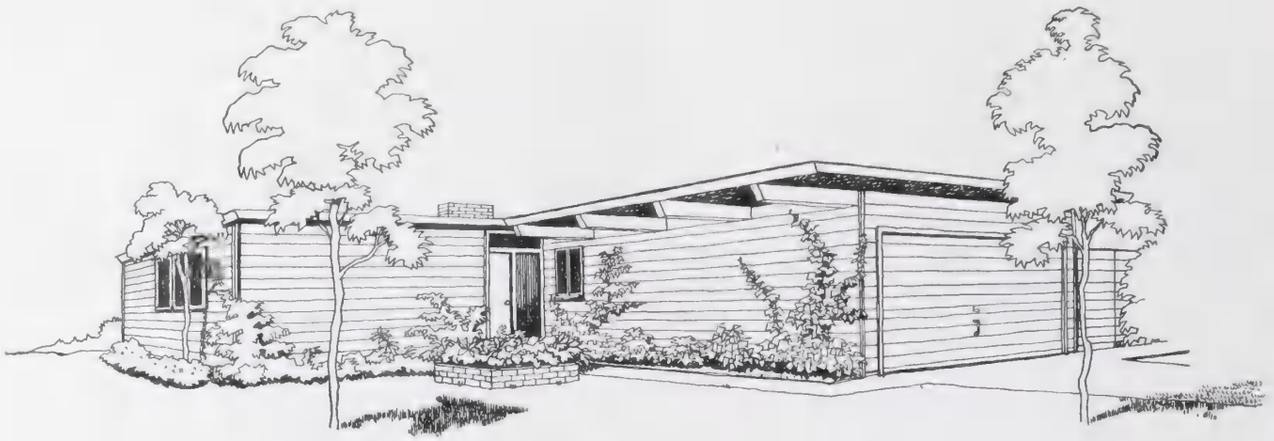
The prospective home builder can look forward to these conditions in 1951:

1 Ample credit on a conservative lending basis. (Be prepared to face a 25 per cent to 40 per cent cash requirement on a first mortgage, unless you are able to finance under the veterans' system or the FHA system for lower-priced houses.)

2 A supply of materials probably as diversified and less difficult to obtain than during the late summer and fall of 1950; but possibly a more restrictive use of some metal products as time goes on.

3 Building costs at least as high as at the present time, with very little prospect of a reduction.

by Miles L. Colean



Amid war and rumors of war the unwelcome possibility of another construction stop-order is bound to disturb 1951 home building plans. How close is this possibility? At the present time, it is not imminent.

Unless military action and military preparations should be expanded far beyond anything now in view, 1951 should be a good building year. Actual absorption of materials used in building supplies and equipment by the government will not be so greatly in excess of what it was in 1950 as to call for any rigorous curtailment of civilian building. It is even possible that some building materials may be easier to obtain during 1951 than they have been during the latter half of 1950.

What made materials scarce during this summer and fall was: (1) an unprecedented volume of construction, which created demands much larger than the supply industries had planned for; and (2) a step-up of buying either to protect outstanding commitments or simply to speculate on the crisis as a result of the sudden involvement in Korea. The consequent pressure on the supply of materials created a danger of price inflation that was really more serious than the possible danger of a lack of materials for war purposes.

To meet the situation the government wisely tightened up on the very easy terms at which (because of its guarantees of veterans' loans and FHA mortgage insurance) loans could be made for buying and building houses. Previous to that, Congress had ended the lush terms upon which loans were being made for apartment buildings. These moves will take a good many buyers of materials out of the market. In so doing, it should bring the inflationary problem under better control. Costs, however, will remain high.

It may well be that what has been done is all that is necessary for some time ahead. Certainly the government has no present plans either for curtailing building by more direct means or of exercising detailed control over what may or may not be built. On the contrary, a continued volume of building—on a somewhat lowered plane from the 1950 sky-ride—is very much desired, not only as a means of maintaining prosperity but as a way of avoiding another huge war housing program should total war come.

What have we been saying to you all along? You don't have to spend $50,000 for a house in order to have the things that count most toward real living value. Privacy, Climate Control, easy operation without servants—these are all matters of planning, not of dollars and cents. Here's a house that proves it.

It's a house in a merchant builder's development, one of 300 ranging in price from $9,400 to $15,000. But even at this range, the standards are high. Some of the 14 different floor plans include two bathrooms. All have three bedrooms and a two-car garage or a 2-car port. (Continued on page 213)

Redwood plywood paneling is a quality material unusual to find in a house in this price range. See what a warm background it makes for simple furnishings, how it reflects the new trend in American taste for natural materials. Yet easy maintenance makes it a real economy for both builder and owner, despite higher first costs of the materials.

Ease of operation without servants takes careful planning, but not necessarily dollars and cents. A serving bar like this one with its stainless steel top helps you retain the pleasant custom of meals in the dining room, but releases you from the heavier chores of serving. Window over sink serves as a convenient lookout on visitors approaching house.

And in every case there has been a careful effort to orient the house for Climate Control and adjust the roof overhang to the sun for shade in summer and sunshine in winter.

How can they do it at those prices? Study the photographs and plans of this house. You will see that dollar-stretching began with good design, since early spending on this count saves later spending to cover up awkward lines or homely corners. This design was good enough to be included in an architectural exhibition held at the San Francisco Museum of Art—rare honor for a merchant builder's house.

Another economy was wangled, not by skimping on materials, but by doing just the opposite—using things of better quality which actually result in savings. One example is the interior paneling of redwood cypress, more expensive to install than many other wall materials, but also more easily repaired in (Continued on next page) case of injury while the house is under construction.

Count up the other basic values—1,233 square feet of living area, radiant floor-panel heating, steel casements throughout the house. And check off the features designed for easy operation and maintenance—asphalt tile flooring, serving bar between dining room and kitchen, sliding doors on the bedroom wardrobe.

All these things ought to convince you that the essentials of better living are within your reach if you know what to ask for and insist on getting it.

Extra ventilation may be obtained on warm nights by leaving bedroom doors open so that hot air will escape over top of partition into living room. On bedroom side of partition are more bookshelves, handy for bedtime reading. Easily maintained walls are especially welcome in a narrow area vulnerable to injuries.

Natural woods are the basis of a whole decorative scheme for the master bedroom. There are two whole walls against which to place furniture, but you don't feel as if you were shut up in a box since a third wall is all glass.

Close relation to the outdoors is possible even in the bedroom of a development house if you have a fence outside to stop the neighbors' view. One whole wall of glass makes the room seem twice as large as it really is, since the eye unconsciously includes the outdoor scene. It also leaves plenty of uninterrupted wall space on the other side of the room.

A Quickie Course in Climate Control

Reading Time: 33 minutes

Here's a fast-reading summary of the twelve main devices that we can employ to improve the "average" climate which most of us have to tolerate

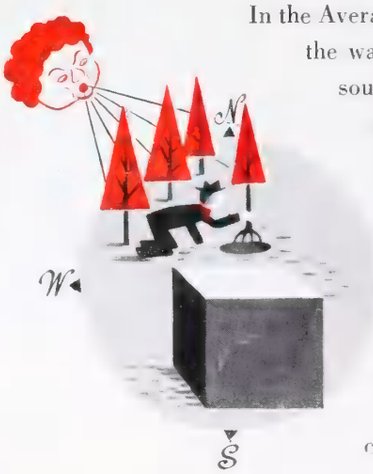
by Wolfgang Langewiesche

Climate Control boils down, really, to just a few tricks of design. To understand each of these devices completely—all its angles, its reasons, all its possibilities—would take you months of study. But you can get the general idea in a flash. To use these tricks in the design of a house takes all the brains, imagination, and experience of a good architect. But once the house stands there, you can see in a flash whether or not it has "Climate Control." If you want to buy, build, or rent a house, you should know the main tricks of Climate Control.

"But wait," you say. "It all depends on the local climate. You wouldn't want the same kind of house in Maine and in Florida." That's true. There are places in the U. S. that have no real problem of summer heat; places that have no real winter. In some parts, summer heat is dry, in others, humid. Seashore winds are different from winds more inland, and so on. All this makes big, important differences. You get a different house for every climate. But the different house still uses the same Climate Control tricks—it merely uses some of them more, some of them less. Anyway, let's not be so ambitious. Let's forget about the very cool parts of the country, the almost-tropical ones, and also the ones where the weather is always just right, like certain places in California. Let's forget also the special locations right on the seashore. Let's think of the big, broad belt where so large a part of our people live—a region that stretches from Kansas City to New York, from Minneapolis maybe to Memphis, and includes Detroit and Chicago, Indianapolis and St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Columbus, Cleveland, Cincinnati. Let's try to control the Average Climate—quite cold in winter, much too hot in summer. And let's not try for perfection. Let's be content to do nothing very wrong, and to do the main things approximately right.

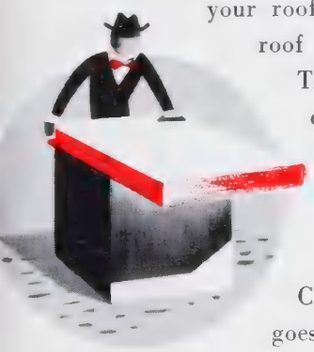
Start at scratch. Imagine somebody gave you a huge wooden crate and said, "Here, live in this." This sounds far-fetched, but it is the quickest way to understand Climate Control. A house is, after all, a sort of box with you inside and the weather outside. Ask yourself, "How do I make that box of mine fit to live in?"

1. A trick with real estate. You have to find a good place to put it. In absolutely flat country, any place would be as good as any other. But really flat country is rare. In rolling country, stay out of the valley bottoms. It is apt to be damp there, hot on summer days, foggy in the mornings, cold on winter nights. (It is also cool there on summer nights, and in some places, this makes valley bottom locations desirable. But in our average climate, no.) You are better off a little way up the slope.



Don't pick a north slope. It's too cold in winter, because the sun can't get at it enough. Yet, in summer, it's just as hot as any other place. In summer, a north slope may actually get more summer sunshine than a south slope does. A north slope exaggerates the seasons, makes the winter colder and the summer warmer. Pick a south slope. It evens out the seasons. It is warm on a sunny winter day; it has an earlier spring, a longer fall; and in summer, it isn't necessarily any hotter than any other location.

If you can't have a south slope, pick an east slope rather than a west slope. An east slope gets morning sun, and that is welcome most of the year, and does not do much harm even in July and August. It is cooler on summer evenings. A west slope gets less morning sun, but it gets a lot of hot afternoon and evening sun in summer, and that is the hottest kind of summer sun.



A southeast slope is the best of all.

2. A trick with trees. Build a windbreak against the northwest—trees or a hedge. Or place your living-box so that the brow of a hill keeps the north wind off it. Here is why: In the Average Climate we're talking about, the warm or hot weather comes with southwest winds. Cool or cold weather comes with northwest winds. Now then: You want to let the southerly winds get at your house in summer. They will help you keep cool. In winter they don't do any harm, because when they blow, the weather isn't very cold. You want to keep the cold northerly winds off your house. In summer, you don't need them for comfort, because when they blow, the weather is dry and cool and you are comfortable without a lot of breeze. But in winter, you don't want them. When a cold wind blows, a house that is exposed uses twice as much fuel as a house that's sheltered.

3. A trick with your roof. Next comes a trick with your roof. It goes without saying that your roof must take care of rain and snow. This Climate Control trick is something else: wide eaves on the south side. Your roof must stick out over the south side of the house the way the brim of a man's hat sticks out and shades his face. Here is the Climate Control effect: In summer, when the sun goes high through the sky, the overhang shades your entire south wall, including also your big south windows. It gives you shade at the time of the year when you want shade. In winter, when the sun moves low through the sky, the sunshine comes right in underneath the overhang and shines through your big south windows deep into your house. You get sun-heat at the time of year when you want heat. Simple, but notice that an overhang works only on the south side of the house. On the other sides, you want overhangs—but for different reasons: so the rain won't blow in an open window so easily, and to protect the wall from weathering. But real Climate Control on those sides is by other tricks, of which the most important is:

4. A trick with a wall. Next, the west side of the house needs your attention. Most people don't know this, but it is important. The west side, not the south side, is the side where summer heat comes from. The low western sun of the long summer afternoons and evenings really blasts away and hits the house squarely on the west wall. It delivers much more heat against the walls than the high noon sun does. And it delivers this heat at a time when the air and the house are already warm. That's why, in our summer-hot climate, west windows should be small. But even with small windows, or none at all, the hot sun still shines on the wall itself. The heat gets into the material and finally seeps into the house.

You need shade on your west wall, but you cannot get it the way you did on your south wall—by a roof overhang. The afternoon sun is so low that it shines in right underneath the overhang. The Climate Control trick on the west side is not something horizontal, but something upright—not a shade roof, but a shade wall. This shade wall could be a couple of trees or a hedge. It could be a trellis with vines. Or, it could be your garage. A garage west of the house, with a "breezeway" connecting it to the house is excellent Climate Control. (Continued on next page)

Glass and comfort, too

Here glass is used right. Big window is on south side, shielded from summer sun by roof overhang. No window on west—it would let in too much summer heat, but would pick up little winter sunshine. East window is pleasant because it lets in morning sun.

Glass needs control

Uncontrolled glass can roast you in summer, chill you in winter. Best control for a south window is a big roof overhang. It keeps sun off in summer, as shown here, but it lets sun shine into your house in winter. The bigger a window, the more it needs this control.

Windows can save you money

When winter sun shines deep into a room, you need no furnace heat. That is why you can afford big windows even in cold climates. But windows must face south. Furnace heat must come on quickly when sun goes behind a cloud, must go off quickly when sun comes out.

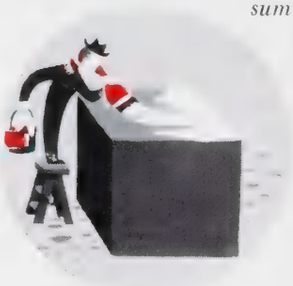
5. A trick with windows. Next, cut yourself some windows, but with discretion. A north window is bad. In summer, it gets several hours of sunshine every morning and evening. And all day long, even in cloudy summer weather, it gets a lot of sky glare—indirect sun-heat that is bounced down from cloud and haze in the sky. So it helps heat up the house in summer. But in winter, the north window never gets any sun; and there is very little sky glare. So it chills your house in winter, because glass is a poor insulator.



A south window is good. You can really let yourself go on south windows. Winter sunshine, hitting a south window, has a terrific heating power, because the winter sun is low and shines deep into the room. With a big enough south window, you need no furnace heat at all—while the sun shines, of course. While the sun does not shine in winter, your south window also chills you, just as a north window does. But you can cut down this heat loss by drawing a heavy drapery across it at night. Counting the sunny and the cloudy hours, the days and the nights together, a south window picks up more heat than it loses—providing it's curtained at night, of course. Then it can save fuel.

In summer a south window gets direct sunshine during the midday hours, and this, of course, has a heating effect. But the effect is less than you'd think. The sun is too high in the sky, so it can't shine deeply into the house. Besides, you can keep it out altogether by using an overhanging roof, as discussed in trick No. 3.

A west window is the worst window. It is very bad in summer and no particular good in winter. The summer sun spends many hours low in the western sky and shines deep into the house. The west window lets terrific amounts of heat come into the house—this at a time of day when the house is hot anyway. In winter, when you would like some heat, the west window can't deliver. By the time the sun gets far enough around into the west to shine in, there's no heat left in it.

An east window is a little better. In summer, it gets morning sun. This is not so bad because a house is fairly cool in the morning. You may not particularly want sun, but at least you can stand it. In winter, an east window doesn't pick up much sun-heat and, of course, like all glass surfaces, it loses a lot of heat in cold weather. The only window that does real business in winter is a south window. The only really good window for controlling climate is a south window.

The Climate Control rules for windows are: (1) The colder the winter, the more you must concentrate all your window area, as far as possible, on the south side. With double glass, you can afford to have as much south window as you like, anywhere in our Average Climate belt. (2) The hotter the summer, the smaller must your west windows be.

6. A trick with color. To keep your living-box cool in summer, paint the top side white. The sun bears down on it all day long. And it is well-known that a white thing stays much cooler when the sun shines on it than a dark thing does.

A good place to put your house

These Swiss houses stand on a south-sloping hillside. It's warmer there in winter, fall, and spring than it would be in the valley flats below. Note how mountain and woods shield site from cold northerly winds. South slope need not be hotter in summer.

Summer heat comes from the sky

Much summer discomfort is caused by heating-up of walls and ceilings of the house as sun shines on it. Heated walls and ceilings then heat you by "radiant heat." A white roof or a shiny metal one (left) reflects the sun. Roof stays cooler; you stay cooler.

A good defense against summer heat

Biggest single source of summer discomfort is the low, hot summer afternoon sun, shining against the west wall of the house. Here, a louvered wall keeps this sun off, yet lets the air circulate. In winter, the house gets little west sun anyway, so wall does no harm.

The underground is comfortable

A few feet below the ground surface the earth stays at practically the same temperature the year round. A room half-sunken into the earth is warm in winter and, especially, cool in summer. This shows that such an underground room need not be cellar-like.

The same applies to the walls, especially to the west wall. Almost as good a "color" as white is the shiny metallic surface of aluminum. Such a surface rejects practically all of the sun rays that hit it. A shiny metal roof or metal wall may not be your idea of pretty, but it sure is cool.

White or "silver" keeps you cool because it keeps the sun-heat out of the material of the roof and the walls. And the cooler your walls and roof, the cooler you feel. Summer discomfort in a house does not come from the hot summer air. It comes from the "radiant heat" your walls and ceiling send out when the sun-heat has warmed them up. Even if the inside surfaces of a room are only mildly warm, their radiant heating effect on you is terrific.

You say, "But if my roof is white, then I also lose the warming effect of sunshine in winter." Not so. The exact reasons would make a long, tedious explanation. But briefly, the only effective way to catch sun-heat in winter is a big south window. Roof and wall colors don't matter much in winter.

7. A trick with earth. Next comes a trick about the underground. Don't say "cellar" because right away it sounds dank, dirty, and dark. Think of it this way. A few feet below the ground surface, it is cool in summer and warm in winter. It is almost the same temperature the year round and that seems warm in winter and cool in summer. So, if you dig a hole under your living-box, your floor won't be so cold in winter. It's true we now have other ways of placing a house on the ground: for example, the concrete slab with heating pipes in it. But an underground space is still worth having because it is so cool in summer. You can live there in summer. It sounds unattractive, but it needn't be, especially if a house is built on a hillside so that a room can be underground at one end and yet have windows and a view on the other. It makes a fine retreat during a heat wave.

8. A trick with air. Next, think about the flow of air inside the house—the whole business of ventilation and drafts. Everybody knows that cross-ventilation helps keep you cool in summer—two windows on opposite sides of the room, so the breeze can blow through. Trouble is, the breeze often dies down as the sun goes down. Yet a house usually is hottest in the late afternoon and it holds the heat for many hours. So you sit all evening in a house that's hot, while the outside world is nice and cool. You need a trick that will get this outside coolness in, without help of a breeze. Here it is, and it's most useful:

Warm air is lighter than cold air and wants to rise. Give your room not merely two windows, but two windows at different levels: one way up high just under the ceiling, the other down low. Now, if the room is warm and the outside air is cool, the warm air flows out the high window, cool air comes in by the low window, even if there is no breeze at all.

You can carry this idea one step further. Make your whole house a sort of chimney in which warm air can rise and get out on top—up the staircase into the attic, up from the attic, through big holes located high in the roof, out into the open. Put big grilled openings into your ceiling, to let warm air go upward. Then, whenever the air (Continued on page 317)

Even a "period" house can have The American Style

by Charlotte Eaton Conway

Collectors' pieces and old materials are perfectly compatible with the most modern of materials and equipment. Put them together and you have an excellent expression of the freedom from dogma which is the American Style

Because the American style is based on performance —not looks—you usually find it only in good modern houses. Few period houses are designed or equipped to meet the demands of today's informal, servantless living. So it is refreshing to find a house like the Melbourne Brindles' in New Canaan, Conn. It is 20 years old, yet it has the American Style because it has been brought up to date in terms of performance.

The one thing that was particularly outmoded was the kitchen. Probably the maid who once occupied the maid's room found the 1930 kitchen adequate and made no complaints. But the maid's room now is empty, and the Brindles, handling household chores themselves, could see room for much improvement. One of their passions is to make living as simple as is consistent with a gracious way of life, and it was natural enough that they should decide to revise out-of-date (Continued on page 223)

A peninsula separates working from eating area. A four-unit range is set into the stainless steel top, cupboards above and below hold utensils and packaged foods. kitchen concepts and install today's new labor-savers.

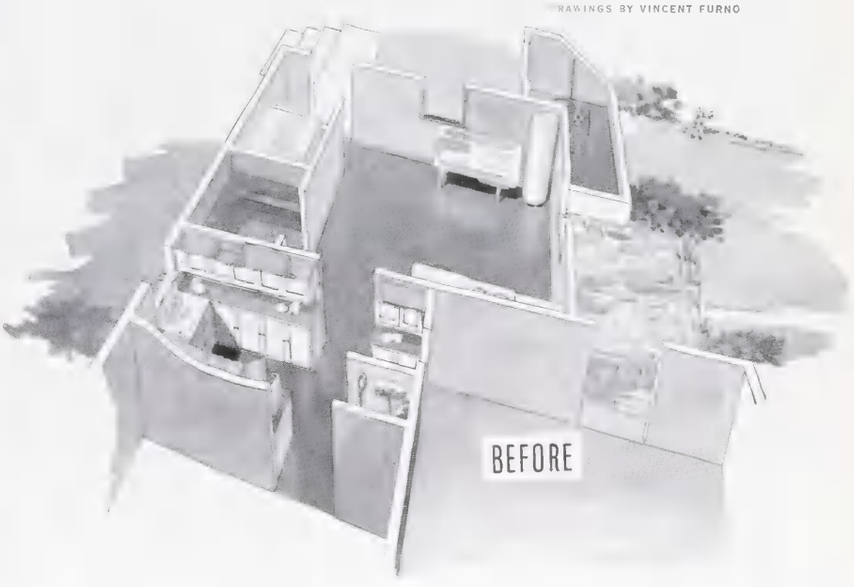
In the doing, they had no intention of abandoning the flavor of the house they love or the nostalgic charm of bits picked up here and there over the years. Their collection of trivets, old stoneware jugs, hospitable big wooden bowls, blue and white china, pewter and other Americana was to be as much at home in the new kitchen as its modern electrical equipment, and its serviceable stainless steel and rubber tile.

Background, they decided, would be beautiful old pine boards from a Vermont barn, and fine old brick with its variations in color and texture. To these they added a reproduction of an Early American wallpaper.

But they did not limit their thinking to the way they wanted their country kitchen to look. They knew, too, how they wanted it to work. For that is the standard by which most Americans judge their houses and what goes into them to-day. If it doesn't work, it isn't acceptable. Hence labor-saving equipment, modern materials, and a common-sense, convenient arrangement.

Now kitchen chores at the Brindles' almost perform themselves in a livable atmosphere everyone enjoys.



APHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

The "management" department hardly looks it, what with the old lamp, a collection of trivets, a flatiron put to paper weight use, and all in a pleasant sunny window. But here are the telephone, file drawers, cookbooks, even a bulletin board for those timely self-reminders or messages to the milk man. Ventilated end cabinet is built with tilt-out bin for soiled clothes. Wall ventilator carries off odors.

Take your kitchen out of the cubby-hole age and put it into our streamlined 1930 era. Add modern equipment and materials and you'll end up with easier work, better looks, and pleasanter living

RAWINGS BY VINCENT FURNO

Twenty years ago architects seemed impelled to divide a kitchen into inconvenient little alcoves, with endless doors and passageways. The Brindles' house was no exception: a refrigerator in one alcove, storage shelves in a dark, windowless closet, brooms in another, storage cabinets alcoved, too. With needless partitions removed, some extra windows put in, kitchen opened up to permit logical, convenient arrangement of equipment. Not only step-saving but eye-saving, for how much better it looks!

This is a stroke of genius in kitchen planning, for Madame Cook, on her side, uses it as a mixing center, has all her mixing things in the whirligig beneath. Monsieur, working from the other side, has everything at hand for the mixing of drinks: glasses, ice cubes, ice crusher, and all. Two people can work at different chores without interference.

Vases and flower holders stored at the little extra sink make flower arranging a pleasure. Small drawers hold cutting shears, bottle openers, and such.

Main sink, electric dishwasher, and washing machine located next to each other along one wall make for an economical arrangement from the plumbing standpoint. Two faucets recessed in the wall above the washer connect to washer hoses, when not in use are concealed by a removable trap door. This is the sort of refinement worth thinking about in making a really good, professional-looking installation. Having washer in kitchen is a step-saver, assures each load of getting done as it accumulates.

How to furnish a sunpocket with climate-hardy plants

by Dr. Joseph E. Howland
House Beautiful's Garden Editor

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S CLIMATE CONTROL PROJECT

The whole idea of a sunpocket is to create a place that the sun heats 10° to 40° hotter than any other part of the yard during spring and fall. Most people don't use their sunpockets in summer or winter, but plants can't pick up and move. So you have a new problem in gardening—how to keep plants alive during extremes of heat and cold.

Ideally, they should look presentable through all 12 months, since sunpockets usually are close to the house and visible from indoors. At least, they must survive both Sahara-like summer conditions and sudden chills of winter that cool them so rapidly, once the sun leaves them for the day. In any event, the plants must be quick to revive for a well-groomed look in fall and spring. Pick plants for shape and foliage. Consider bloom a plus, not a must. Check list opposite, prepared by our regional consultants.

These sunpocket plants survive extremes of heat and cold in your climate

Zone 1. Extra water during droughts and generous use of plant food make the following plants reliably climate-hardy in this zone:

Rugosa roses, especially F. J. Grootendorst and pink Grootendorst
Red-leaved barberry
Russian olive
Cotoneaster, especially C. horizontalis. C. divaricata, and C. multiflora
Redvein enkianthus
Winged euonymus
Linden viburnum, Doublefile viburnum
Shrub althea
Amur privet
Buckthorn
Smoketree

Zone 2. In the Southern states above Florida, the sunpocket is usually modified into a sunny winter terrace shaded in summer by deciduous trees. Grow the following plants:

Prickly pear cactus Succulents
Century plant
Pink yucca
Sawtooth sotol
Yuccas
Palms (lower South)
Wintergreen barberry
Loquat (lower South)
Japanese fatsia (lower South)
Chinese holly and its many varieties
Bamboos (lower South, up to mountains)
Glossy privet
Mahonia and myrica
Lavender
Rosemary Santolina
Sanseveria (up to Charleston)
Oleander (to Norfolk along the coast)
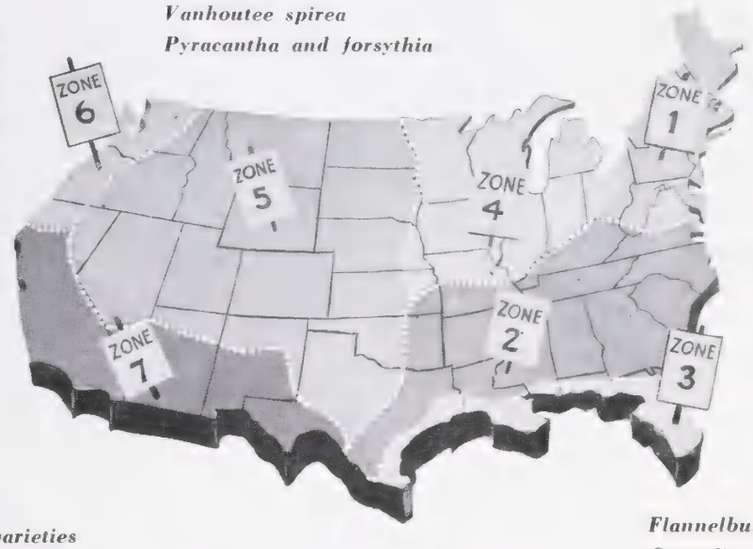
Podocarpus



Some fall and winter-blooming bulbs and perennials—Greek winter iris, sternbergia, miniature amaryllis, and Cape Colony nerine—actually need the summer baking which an exposed sun pocket gives them.

Zone 3. Sunpockets have been used for many years by Florida winter residents. Almost all trees that grow in this section endure the heat of a sunpocket. Also grow in upper part of zone:

Anise shrub
Elephant ear (tender)
Spanish bayonet and Adams needle
Hydrangea and oleander
In the frost-free area grow:
Cocculus and copperleaf
Croton and golden dewdrop
Poinsettia and sanseveria
Rice paper plant
Castor bean plant
Traveler's tree and banana

Zone 4. The plants in this area need good soil, and they must not be planted too close to a wall or beneath an overhanging roof. You must water during dry periods. If you do this you can grow:

Siebold's acanthopanax
Hercules Club aralia
Mentor and wintergreen barberry
Spreading euonymus
Vanhoutee spirea
Pyracantha and forsythia

English ivy and periwinkle
Pachysandra
Flowering dogwood and Tree wisteria

Sunpockets usually aren't large enough for trees, but if any are needed, choose flowering dogwood, saucer magnolia, or tree wisteria.

Zone 5. In perennials and annuals, depend on zinnias, calendulas, marigolds, portulacas, and fall asters, also 4 o'clocks, iris, chrysanthemums, and sedums. We have more than a dozen good shrubs:

Caragana and colutea
Russian olive and barberry
Bush cinquefoil
Tamarix and sumac
Shrub roses and lilac Matrimony vine
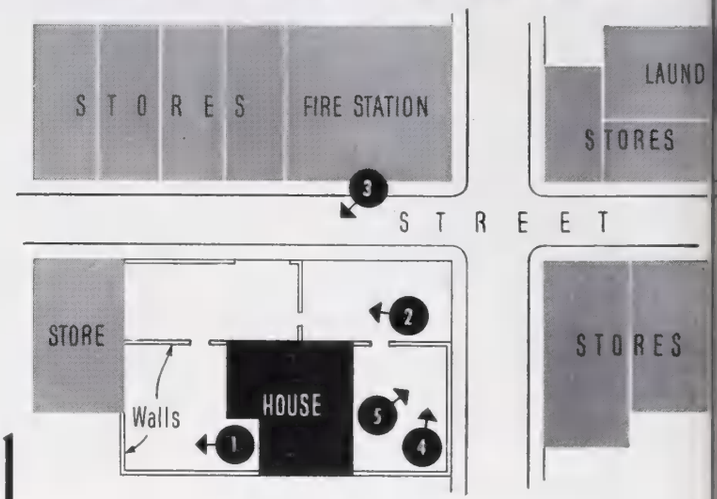
Leadplant and other amorphas
Alpine currant
Buckthorn and Sandcherry
Cotoneasters and rose acacia
Buffaloberry
Sea buckthorn and aralia
Rock spirea

Zone 6. Since the sunpocket is likely to find considerable use here in summer as well as spring and fall, look for summer-flowering plants:



Cotoneasters
Pyracantha
Hypericum
Raphiolepis and cistus
Ceanothus and elaeagnus
Stranvaesia
Bush cinquefoil
Cytisus, genista and spartium
Staghorn sumac
Bluebeard and Buddleia

Zone 7. Plants for sunpockets in California have to be tough customers to stand months of drought and sunshine. The plants for Eastern gardens are sissies by comparison. California natives:

Adenostoma sparsifolium (Chamise, Redshanks)
Arctostaphylos
Ceanothus
Monkeyflowers
Toothed manzanita
Flannelbush
Coast live oak and Scrub oak True live oak Lemonadeberry
Laurel and sugar sumac
Agave and canonpoppy
California-fuchsia
Foreign trees and shrubs:
Aloe and banksia Bottlebrush
Beefwood
Wormwood senna
Canary glorybind
Pride of Madeira
Gazania and hakea
Australian teatree
Silverleaf
Chinaberry
Sea-lavender
Mesembryanthemum
Olive
California peppertree
Pelargonium
Bird-of-Paradise-flower
Athel and bush germander

Conveniently near, yet away from it all

This city garden is across the street from the fire station, next to a busy store, and near a big laundry, but there is complete privacy and an air of country living

Florence Gerke
Landscape Architect

You don't expect to find much privacy on a downtown corner lot. See how much the L. A. Courtemanches, Jr., enjoy at their home in McMinnville, Ore., thanks to skillful use of garden walls and trees that shut out unwanted views and sounds of the city. Even the skyline has a country look where before it was full of stores, signs, and high chimneys. Because of a wise choice of plants, all this has been accomplished without making garden maintenance expensive.

2 Because the fire station is across the street, automobiles cannot be parked in front of the house. So a big off-street parking space was built, convenient to both the guest entrance and to the service door.

3 The parking lot is king-size, adequate for the number of automobiles likely to be at a large party, a requisite for anyone who likes to entertain. The walls help to make it look smaller than it really is.

Have you discovered the Luxury of simplification?

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

When you learn to get rid of curlicues it's like taking your first free breath of air after a week of oppressive dog days

Have you ever tried taking everything out of your living room, painting the walls, polishing the floor, then replacing the furnishings slowly, one by one? If you have, we'll wager you never put back all of the things you took out. While you were in the midst of it, you discovered something you'd never noticed before—the view from the window, perhaps, the beauty of one big bowl, or the smooth, uncluttered surface of a gleaming table top. So you stopped right there.

The same thing happens when you come upon simplification of design such as you see in this new furniture by Van Keppel-Green for Brown-Saltman. You notice the warm glow of the wood because no carved curlicues or intricate hardware distract you. You appreciate the subtle coloring and soft texture of the suiting fabric on the chairs because no tufting obscures the weave. Above all, you discover the luxury of no stretchers to dust, no moldings to stop the sweep of the polish cloth.

Furnishing a small bedroom is simplified by this three-piece headboard that eliminates the need of bedside tables. Center panel and side panels with drawers attached are sold separately, may be bolted together. Drawers of chest have recessed finger grips at the ends.

You'd never suspect from the simple looks of this furniture, how it simplifies your living. Buffet has sliding trays for silver and linens, shelves for glasses, special compartments for trays and dining-table leaves. Doors open at pressure of an invisible touch-latch.

Rubber-cushioned chairs and sofa are covered with wool fabrics (similar to soft suiting) designed by Hoffman California Woolens. Inlaid bands and legs of coffee table are koa wood; table top, like other pieces in group, is Tangile mahogany in honey-colored finish.

A practiced, urbane party-giver tells you how not to be that most deadly social bore—the apologetic hostess

by Edith Key Haines

Author of "Away, Dull Cooking"

The sorriest thing on the social scene—and the most unnecessary one—is the apologetic hostess. She is the flustered bore whose taut, self-conscious victims are the very guests she had hoped to entertain. She torments them with excuses, and worries the comfortable into uneasiness. She is sorry that the lobster isn't crabmeat, that the cake isn't lighter, that the coffee isn't hotter, and so inevitably devitalizes even the food she serves. For apologies can turn a good casserole into a mess of pottage.

But there is a reason why this unhappy creature makes fiascos of festivities. She is simply afraid.

With little or no domestic help she has to reconcile the job of chief cook and butler with the equally urgent role of gracious, tempo-setting hostess. She is bedevilled, as what hostess hasn't been, by the fear that she can't run a kitchen and a salon simultaneously. She worries that all the elements of the meal won't be ready on time, each properly crisp or tender or browned as it should be. She's afraid she can't serve the guests gracefully without servants. Or she broods over the imagined skimpiness of the menu.

by Marva P. Shearer

Selecting a vacation spot is in some ways very much like choosing a husband or a wife. You start out with a few definite qualifications in mind and end up by letting your heart make the decision.

The last time we were confronted by this dilemma—taking a vacation, not getting married—our list of requirements was short and to the point.

Like most winter vacationists, we were in the market for a country that featured (1) good climate (2) pleasant scenery and people (3) culture, information, and entertainment (4) good return on our travel dollar.

We mentioned these requisites to a few local travel agents who quickly suggested Florida or California. Since there are almost as many autos in California as there are bookies in Florida, we vetoed those two bountiful states in favor of a more foreign location.

After considerable reading, research and consultation with our bank balance, we decided upon Peru in South America. A happier choice for a vacation no one has ever made, not even Mr. Fitzpatrick of the Travel Talks.

When we mentioned to several of our friends where we planned to spend our winter holiday, they smiled wanly and said, "Oh, yes, that's the country conquered by the Spaniard, Sam Pizarro."

They tried to carry it off gamely with aplomb and grace, but we could detect in their demeanor the feeling that they thought us slightly cracked.

Ever since Life magazine some years ago ran the story of a five-year-old Peruvian girl who had given birth to a baby, people have been convinced that Peru is very much unlike Grosse Point, Michigan; that it is, in fact, a kind of wild, quake-wracked, jungle-infested territory which is reached only after the most arduous of safaris.

Actually, life in Peru is on the whole a good deal calmer, fuller, cheaper, and easier, than anything in the United States; and the country itself can be reached with ridiculous ease, which is one of the fundamental reasons why we chose it.

We ankled onto a DC-6 run by Braniff International Airways out of Houston, Texas, at noon one day and by 5:00 A. M. the next morning, a little over 15 hours, there we were in Lima. For $10 extra, Braniff makes up a sleeper for you all the way from Havana to Peru. The route is Houston-Havana-Panama-Ecuador-Peru, and, if this isn't the greatest airline buy since the Wright Brothers purchased the flying concession at Kitty Hawk, then we will eat Mr. Braniff bone by bone.

Anyway, for the experienced winter traveler who's had his fill of the domestic January resorts and would prefer a less brass, less expensive vacational tone, Peru is a must.

In Chamber of Commerce terms, it has everything, and in exactly the right proportion.

Take climate, for example, which is the basic ingredient of any vacation. Peru has three of these, because there are really three Perus. Take a rectangle, trisect it lengthwise, and that's Peru.

One section is called the montaña. This for the tourist is the worst, and we mention it only because we want to be thorough. It consists of the Amazon River basin, the slopes of the Andes, steaming jungles, and half-naked Indians. No one in his right mind would live in this area of the country unless he were searching for gold, Judge Crater, or working on a Ph.D. dissertation. The humidity is killing; the rains are so heavy that they seem like something generated by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special effects department; and in (Continued on page 273)

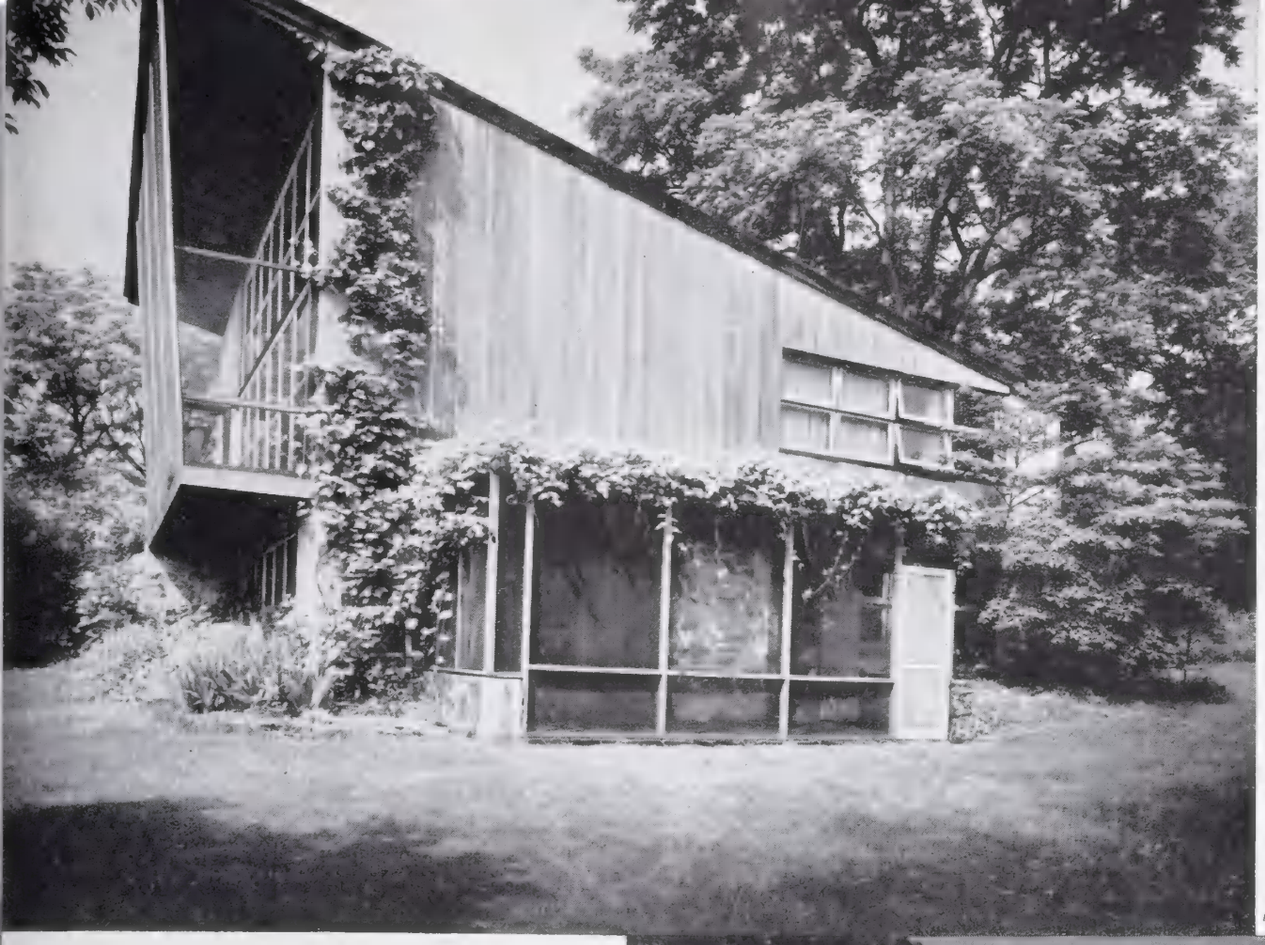
Peru is a land so different from our own—in scenery, spirit and social habits—that it provides a fresh frame of reference from which to view our own country and mode of living. You'll find a wealth of unusual architecture like the carved cedar balconies (opposite) on the Archbishop's palace on Plaza De Armas in Lima.

This MODERN house is 150 years old



It rose, Phoenix-like, from the burned-out shell of an old house. Some farmer, long ago, showed his good sense, ingenuity, and modesty in building it. And 150 years later the new owner found these qualities useful when remodeling it for his own use. The ease and naturalness of the conversion shows how intimately the best of the present is connected to best of the past

A changed house—but in the same tradition

From the sketch above you can see how the old house looked when the architect found it; at right, the way it looks today. It was originally a typical New Jersey farmhouse, with an L-shaped plan set into a southeast hillside. It was gutted by fire and only the fieldstone walls were left standing. The architect replaced the intersecting gables with a single-slope roof. Basically, the plan was unaltered. The right exposures—to south and east, the first floor snuggled into the hill, the few windows to the west—all these made good sense when the house was built, and make good sense today. Here old blends with new.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY LIONEL FREEDMAN: PICTOR

An old American custom—summer meals under a grape arbor—has always had one hazard: bees and wasps attracted by the ripening fruit. In this house it is neatly sidestepped by converting the arbor into a screened cage, with the vines on the top, outside. Copper insect mesh, 6 ft. wide, is nailed directly to the cypress frame. Since the leaves go with first frost, the brick-floored dining room behind the arbor gets full winter morning sun.

There were plenty of technical reasons why the farmer who originally built this house could not open up the whole south wall to the countryside. He had not the means of mastering the excessive sun and glare, insects, blowing rain and winter cold. Yet he would approve of the skill and simplicity with which it was done by the present owner. A screened balcony protects an entire glass wall, lower half of which slides open like barn doors.

This MODERN house

It is no accident that many modern architects are finding the remodeling of old houses a surprisingly satisfactory experience. Contemporary interest in simple forms and rich textures finds an echo in many early American houses. But it is much more than a matter of mere looks. This old New Jersey farmhouse was already entirely "modern" in its siting and orientation.

If you study the plans at right, you'll see that the owner-designer, Paul W. Grotz, was able to give all his rooms an outlook toward east and south, the direction of summer breeze and winter sun, with minimum exposure to west and north, direction of cold winter winds. The hillside location gave both floors direct access to the outdoors, a thing you want in a country house. Even more important, from the comfort standpoint, it gave a half-submerged ground floor that's cool in summer, warm in winter. It is factors like these—and not mere surface appearance—that give the best of our old houses a real kinship with the best of the new.

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

A new room in the shell of an old one

The present owners of this handsome living room started with a hollow masonry shell and nothing else. The new ceiling is higher, following the line of the single slope roof. A series of small, double-hung windows along the south has been replaced by a big window-wall. Here big glass doors slide back like barn doors to open the room onto the new screened balcony. The old masonry walls caused serious condensation. Hence they were sheathed internally with a thoroughly modern wall of natural gum plywood backed up with Wood Conversion Company's vapor-sealed Balsam-Wool blankets.

Modern is as modern does

The brick-floored dining room must look much like it did a century ago. But there has been no effort to copy the old. The high horizontal windows to the south, the screened grape arbor to the east, the open flow into the kitchen—all are modern in concept and execution. Yet they were inherent in the old.

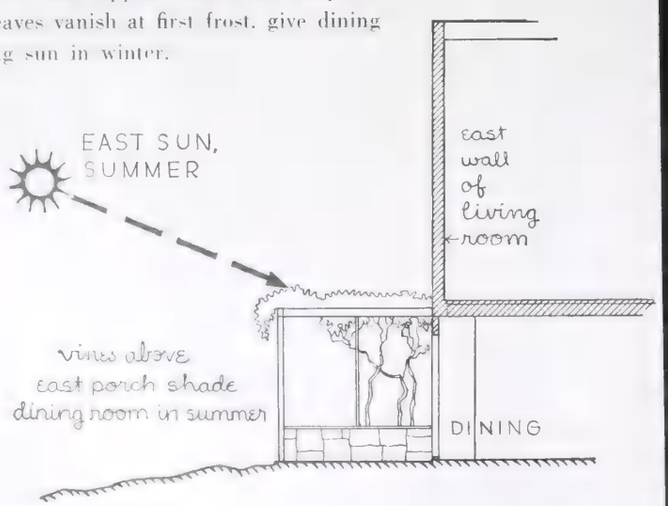
Climate Control comes naturally to a house that's well-sited to begin with



Here you see how the south wall was reconstructed to permit the fullest enjoyment of the countryside, winter and summer. Study these pictures to see how problems of sun, glare, insects, and rain have been solved by a bold use of new and old materials.

Vines are one of your best and cheapest sun-control devices

Anyone who's fond of summer meals in a grape arbor knows that it's a mixed blessing. One simple way to make it a solid pleasure for nice days is to screen it. That's what has been done here. A well-nigh permanent cage of cypress and copper insect mesh keep out bees and flies. Leaves vanish at first frost, give dining room full morning sun in winter.

5 Thermostats FOR COMFORT AND REAL FUEL ECONOMY!

This Home has 5 Thermostats

1. In the Living-Dining Area
2. In the Sleeping Rooms Area
3. In the Kitchen-Service Area
4. In the Guest Rooms Area
5. In the Maids' Rooms Area

THIS CONNECTICUT residence is an excellent example of a home that is custom-built to offer the ultimate in gracious living. Nothing has been overlooked in the way of comfort. And comfort, of course, starts with the heating system!

To assure the utmost in both comfort and economy, this home was divided into 5 heat control zones—each with its own Honeywell thermostat. Heat is supplied only in the amount needed and where it is needed. No chance that one part of the house will be too warm while another section is chilly. Instead, there is all-over comfort for every room and no fuel waste from overheating.

You, too, can have the same uniformly controlled temperature in your home. When done at the time of building, zoning a home costs very little more. Actually it will pay for itself in fuel economy. And you will be repaid many times over by the greater comfort.

Consult your architect and heating engineer about the proper location of controls and control areas for your new home. Or, mail the coupon for the interesting, informative booklet—"10 Ways to Heat Your New Home."

ELECTRONIC CLOCK THERMOSTAT

Automatically lowered night temperatures may be provided for each zone, for additional convenience and fuel economy.

bell once. I am forced to ignore the door bell, and presently my youngest son comes in to give me a message from the caller:

"Mother," he says accusingly, "the brush man is here. He says he thinks you haven't done your fall cleaning, and you must need lots of things."

"He does, does he?" I growl at my youngest, and proceed to give him my unexpurgated opinion of brush salesmen. At this point I discover the not-at-all embarrassed salesman is calmly writing his name in the dust of my kitchen window.

"You'll pardon me, Madam," he murmurs in a Charles Boyer-I want-to-go-back-to-the-Casbah voice, "but you need a schedule. Now, with each purchase of our all-purpose brush we are giving absolutely free a helpful schedule—"

I look him squarely in the eye, grab a stewpan by the handle, and sing two verses of "The Star Spangled Banner." You may be interested to know I never have thrown a stewpan at any one, but my youngest son could sing two verses of our national anthem long before he had mastered any of Mother Goose's less difficult ditties.

Life can be beautiful—but not right now. Heavenly day, it's lunch time! My beauty schedule says I'm to have a cup of hot soup, a green salad, and a cup of tea. But my husband eats lunch, too. My three sons, and not infrequently several of their friends who join us informally, also eat lunch. It's a nasty habit but it isn't immoral, and I haven't the heart to stop them. Oh, sure all of us can have soup, salad, and tea or milk, but it is going to take longer than the leisurely 30 minutes specified.

The barely perceptible gleam in my eye is due entirely to the knowledge that by reversing the schedule again I can save ten minutes. I'm supposed to have fruit juice and celery at four o'clock, but to save time I'll just eat it with my lunch.

"You're smart." I flatter me, "just plain smart. Of course, you'll feel like a stuffed goat—but ten whole minutes!"

By two o'clock the men in my life have gone again, the luncheon dishes have been washed, the living room is reasonably straight once more. The youngest child has had a once-over-lightly bath and is tucked away for a nap. I'm beginning to look like a fine example of deranged womanhood, and still I haven't done the special work—laundry and/or gardening. Even so, dat ole debbil schedule indicates that between two and three the housewife can roll up her hair, cold-cream her face, and lie down with soothing pads over her eyes. After she is refreshed by her long rest, she can dress for anything the afternoon offers. Wondering vaguely what the recommended attire is for a bout with the washing machine (which is what the afternoon offers!) I shrug my shoulders at the light work, roll up my hair, put a mud pack on my face and neck . . . and the door bell rings. Louder and louder. Frenziedly I rub off most of the wet pack on one of my best bath towels and sneak to the living-room window. Two women. But who? Why didn't they call? They must be tired, too—at least, one of them is leaning against the door bell.

All patience spent, all caution tossed to the evil winds, I swagger to the door.

"How d'you do?" I smirk. Bits of mud pack still on my face have hardened and dried. One corner of my mouth is pulled down in a definite sneer.

"Is Mrs. Barnes at home?" One of the ten best-dressed women in the U.S. inquires sweetly. Clutching at the last remnant of straw, I toy with the idea of saying no. But the large, spongy baloon I refer to as my conscience inflates itself enough to answer, in a surprisingly clear voice, "I am Mrs. Barnes."

"Oh? Oh . . ." The eleventh best-dressed woman in the U. S. raises her eyebrows in a questioning Did-God-make-you-too? manner and proceeds with a half-hearted explanation of this untimely visit. They're from the city, of course, and are making a survey of the political intentions of the villages. From an elementary discourse on woman's place in the world—including the startling announcement that woman was granted the Vote in 1919—they proceed to the coming elections. A bobby-pin is scratching the back of my ear, my face stings from the dried mud pack, and I am horrified to find myself humming "The Star Spangled Banner." The political emissaries gasp, sniff the air, pat my shoulder encouragingly, and race to their car, parked at the curb.

My youngest has awakened. He doesn't believe I am his mother. Oh, fine! But after all, he's only three-and-a-half and his mother didn't have those awful splotches on her face when he went to sleep. It takes a good scrubbing of my face, the unrolling of my hair, a glass of milk and a cookie to restore him to his usually cheerful attitude. We're very chummy by this time, and he feels called upon to describe in some detail the circus he saw last month. I listen. I think, but when he pauses for breath, I say, "Roger, did you know the Republicans have a candidate for 1948?"

Roger prods me back to reality by asking if we are to have chocolate cake for dinner. Dinner? Oh, yes, this is Tuesday, isn't it? And we always eat on Tuesday, don't we? But first we must do a few chores, not more than 25 or 30, including a little light work—laundry and/or gardening.

Some time between six and seven o'clock dinner is served. It is one of life's little miracles, truly it is, but there it is on the table—salad, meat, vegetables, rolls, ice cream, coffee, and milk.

When the dishes are finished, I breathe a sigh of relief. We have no engagements, thank goodness. I have the whole evening to wrestle with that schedule. My husband settles down with a book. The boys are studying. The youngest already is asleep, bless him. I sneak off upstairs for more of those body beautifying exercises. The exercises having produced a pleasant glow, I pour bath salts in the tub, and turn on the hot water. I pin up my hair, put cold cream lavishly on my face and neck. I lift one foot into the tub of fragrant, sootling water, and there comes pounding on the bathroom door. My husband's voice rises urgently above the sound of the running water: "Hurry and come down, Alice. The Browns are here with their vacation movies."

Somewhere between Amarillo and Yellowstone Park, via the Browns' movies, I yawn audibly, notice vaguely that Mrs. Brown has a new permanent. Later at bridge as Mr. Brown's partner, I ruin a beautiful hand for him by gross under-bidding. Mrs. Brown has a new shade of nail polish—and a very smart dress. I'm beginning rather to resent her even before she says, out of a clear blue sky, "I found the most marvelous beauty schedule in a magazine yesterday—"

Charm is where you find it

by Jean Tigar

Fine sights and sounds and odors are not all dewdrops, opera, and lilacs—they abound in our commonplace living

WHEN I was a child, the woman's page of our local daily used to feature a different contest every week. The subject matter was announced on Monday, and the winners made known the following week. Without a box top or even a reasonable facsimile (those were the days!), you could have your say on the topics about which you felt capable. Personally I felt capable of them all. And I labored feverishly every night, pushing homework aside, and giving my all for the good of one of the two-dollar prizes. But I never won.

The contest that intrigued me most was the one that concerned favorite sights, sounds, and smells. I remember vividly how I said I adored grand opera (my father had just bought a second-hand "talking machine" and the nearest I was getting to grand opera were Sousa's marches and the Hawaiian records that came with it), the odor of lilacs, and the twinkling of dewdrops on the grass. (This last would have been quite a revelation to my mother inasmuch as by the time she succeeded in getting me out of bed of a morning, the dewdrops were gone.) When my na was missing from the list of w ners, I concluded it was beca too many contestants were cr about the same things I was. A then I forgot it. The hoax of the hand-hewn beam

by Robert Chuckrow

Hear ye who long for the old skill of Colonial carpenters! Modern houses are not only better built, but fireproof

FIRST, let me say I like old houses. I appreciate the charm and graciousness of a Cape Cod or a Dutch Colonial. Some of my best friends are Salt Boxes. But the next time somebody slips me that tired cliché. "They sure knew how to build in the old days." I hope a hand-hewn beam collapses gently on his head.

They knew how to build in the old days, but only within the limits of their knowledge of structure and materials—and that was slim. We build better today, far better. We not only build better today than the Colonial carpenters did, but we build better today than yesterday, and better yesterday than prewar. Home construction is a physical science that is undergoing more research today than the hydrogen bomb, and anybody who gets starry-eyed when he discusses that dream of a prewar house, whether it's the last war or the Revolutionar has been mesmerized by a interesting but false inform beauty to a modern designer to see a structural member seven times the size required for its function.

Structural framing throughout was generally a combination of too much and too little. Today a couple of 4″ hollow steel columns and a 6″ x 8′ girder are all the intermediate support required for a normal house load. But in the old days 8″ x 8′ columns were scattered about as though they were toothpicks. Roof rafters were frequently 6″ x 6″s, spaced 3 feet apart, and framed into an 8″ x 8″ roof tree—or ridge board as we call it now. Since the roof tree supports no load at all, our poor old house has been sway-backed for years, just for the glory of holding aloft a useless hand-hewn masterpiece. At the other extreme, studs were generally 2″ x 3″s spaced two feet apart, while modern practice dictates 2″ x 4″s not more than 16″ apart.

One of the most important features of frame construction today is sheathing, which gives rigidity to the entire structure and makes the sidewalls weathertight. This detail was omitted in the old days, when it was considered sufficient to brace with struts, nailing clapboards or weatherboards directly to studs.

As for weathertightness, today's walls generally contain asphalt-saturated building paper to keep out dampness, plus an air space and a substantial thickness of insulation. In the days of the good builders, this was all provided for merely by filling up the cracks in the siding with mud.

Metal flashing and gutters were unknown in early construction. Water trickled down the chimney and through the windows like rain down the neck of your overcoat.

The stone chimneys were almost heavy enough to sink through bedrock. And not only were flues full of leaks, but the old boys were fond of framing their timbers right into the chimneys—a practice that would make today's fire underwriters less than enthusiastic. Wood shingles, in time, become mellow and quaint. But wood ash all looks the same, and today's composition shingles are fireproof. They're also cheaper to buy and install.

Plaster was applied in thin coats over wood lath. If the plaster adhered, then the lath showed through. But usually the plaster, made of sand and lime, soon lost its grip and flopped in large sections in Grandfather's lap. To add insult to injury, plaste strengthened with cowhai frequently looked as if it ne shave.

A disappearing table may be the solution if your kitchen is small. It will provide extra work space, as well as a spot for quick snacks. Mr. & Mrs. E. H. Sieling, of York, Pa., built one of plywood, heavy enough for its size, with simple molding to serve as wall frame. A catch to hold table to wall when closed and hinges for table and fold-out leg were only hardware needed. Wax or paint as you choose.

An old-fashioned stove can be modernized by removing legs, building cupboards around it. Have cooking units at same height as adjoining counter. Plan storage space beneath to suit your specific needs. You can have one shelf, as here, or divide space into shallower sections or a vertical file, if that's the way you like to keep your cake tins and pie plates, or casseroles.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

A pass-through saves steps between kitchen and pantry or dining room. When you put in cupboards, leave an open space between counter and wall cabinets, so you can reach through easily from either side. Mr. & Mrs. Willard Lewis claim this simple device saves a thousand steps and makes for better ventilation besides. Their home is in Bel Air, West Los Angeles, Calif.

A drop-leaf kitchen desk is a godsend to the business-like housewife, and even in a small kitchen, space usually can be found for it. Architect Paul Kirk worked one in for Dr. & Mrs. Lawrence A. Schueler in their Port Angeles, Washington, home. When built in flush with other cabinets, it is good-looking, open or closed. Be sure drop leaf is hinged at height convenient and comfortable for the woman who is to use it.

One closet all for pots and pans can save a lot of time when they are hung and racked neatly. If you haven't a closet now, one can be built quite easily, fitted with hooks, clamps, and racks to suit your utensils wardrobe. In their Seattle, Washington, home, Mr. & Mrs. Bernard Dahl find now they can see at a glance exactly what they want and bring it to the stove without fumbling or upsetting everything else.

Another pots-and-pans solution is a very shallow closet, which might replace an unused kitchen door. Two narrow doors are better than one wide one, taking up less room when open. Screw-hooks at measured intervals permit spacing utensils according to your own needs. Bin at bottom is excellent for pot covers. This closet was designed by architects Webster & Allen for Mr. & Mrs. Frank Judson in Winnetka, Ill.

Such is the general condition. All the same, each year's crop, including this year's, produces some good kernels. According to annual custom, I call your attention to some of these. Because you may want to read them yourself, you may want to give them as Christmas gifts to your music-loving friends. Or the other way around—give them as gifts and then borrow them back.

One of the year's best manuals is The Victor Book of Overtures, Tone Poems and Other Orchestral Works by Charles O'Connell. Mr. O'Connell has been a guide in the woods of music long enough to know where the fresh brooks and the sunny glades are to be found. The present work complements his Victor Book of Symphonies and deals, as the title indicates, with the shorter pieces of the orchestral repertoire, some of which enliven a concert more than the statelier symphonies do. Here they are, these overtures and tone poems and suites, from Auber to Wolf-Ferrari, beginning and ending with light music, but encompassing such mighty works as Beethoven's Lenore Overture No. 3, Debussy's La Mer,

NEW, GOOD BOOKS ON MUSIC

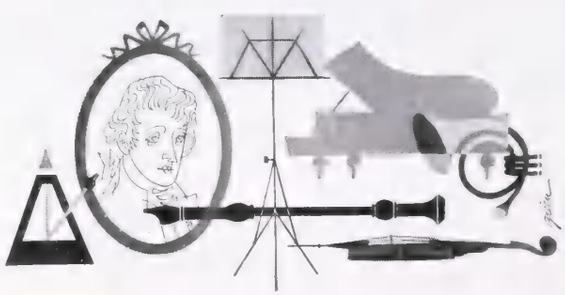
Schönberg's Verklärte Nacht, and Richard Strauss's Thus Spake Zarathustra. Mr. O'Connell's discussions are, as usual, sanely enthusiastic. Sanity and enthusiasm are indispensable equipment for anyone who wishes to speak with words about an art that speaks without words. The brief remarks about the composers—quick shadow profiles cut with a pair of scissors—are also helpful. And the musical quotations are simple; you'll be able to toy with them on the piano.



RECORD collecting has become a hobby with its own laws, language specialization, collectors' fury, and with its own brand of snobbery. Record collecting is not nearly so popular as philately, but almost as beset with tenets and mystification. With European imports now being freely available, with new record companies springing up to present this and that recondite marvel fresh from Vienna or Milan, with the American companies putting out many releases every month (too many, I think), with collectors listening enthusiastically to the recordings of the past —with all this going on—a critical appraisal of the labyrinthine catalogs is becoming more necessary every year.

This year two fresh guides were published—rather two new editions, reworked and brought up-to-date, of older books. These are virtually new books, as they contain so much new material. One is by Irving Kolodin and is called The New Guide to Recorded Music (International Edition). Mr. Kolodin is editor of the record section of The Saturday Review of Literature. The other is Records, 1950 Edition, by David Hall.

The book by David Hall is the more comprehensive and, being published later, the more up-to-date. Mr. Hall has strong likes and dislikes, which is what he ought to have in such a book or else it would be a catalog and not a book. I don't happen to agree with several of his judgments (I disagree, for example, with his slight estimate of Heifetz), nor do I believe that he has done most record collectors a service by including quite so much off-the-beaten-track music. Have you ever heard of John Farmer, Giles Farnaby, Oscar Lorenzo Fernandez, Anton Filtz, Gerald Finzi, Joseph Bohuslav Foerster, Jean Françaix, and Johann Jacob Froberger? These are all included under the F's, and that seems to me exploring too many little islands. But perhaps it is this very unorthodoxy that gives the book its value. It certainly represents an immense amount of scholarship.

Personally, I prefer the Kolodin book, which is somewhat less inclined to sail away from the main routes. Mr. Kolodin, also, is a man of opinions, but he presents them in a more urbane and entertaining style. The physical arrangement of the book is a further advantage. The typesetting is good. Whether you are looking for Liszt's Paganini Etudes or a particular Bach Toccata, you can find it quickly.

Among the biographies, I enjoyed one of the man who is known (wrongly) as the father of the symphony. A curious re-evaluation of Haydn has been taking place in our time. We used to think of him as a candlelight composer, politely gay, predominately in pleasant humour though occasionally inclined to lyric song, and nearly always formal. We have now found out that his symphonies contain, behind that polite musical language, vigorous, dramatic, and often daring imagination. They are lighted ever so often not by candles but by fearsome lightning flashes. The more we know of Haydn the higher does he grow, and the only difficulty in getting to know him is the learning of his language. If we could divest him of the title "Papa Haydn" that would help too. The book, by H. E. Jacob, Joseph Haydn, His Art, Times, and Glory

s the first full-length biography which has appeared in English for many a year. though even this is a book written by a German. It's a little strange—Haydn is in more ense than one an international omposer. He himself was particularly fond of England and all the English. His best symphonies (the welve symphonies known as the ondon Symphonies) were produced there. At any rate. here is a ook about him at long last and ne nationality of the author does ot matter. for Mr. Jacob's style. n spite of occasional Teutonisms hich emerge in the translation. is oroughly readable and easy goig. The very paper of the book is ermeated with his love for Haydn. ince Haydn himself was a colorful nd adventurous personality (not all the polite and formal gentlean that one might guess him to be om his portraits). a man bent on queezing the most out of life. ady for amorous and every other nd of adventure up to his ripe d age. the story of his life and glory" is a lively story.

O review of musical books published in any one year would be mplete without mentioning at ast one book by Sigmund Spaeth. e powerhouse of musical writers. This year it is Dedication, the Love Story of Clara and Robert Schumann, a short and unpretentious book which Mr. Spaeth tells me started out as a book intended for children but which grew in the writing of it into something more. It is not a complete Schumann biography—merely the recounting of one of music's celebrated romances. Mr. Spaeth tells the story without using the brand of marshmallows confected in Hollywood. He takes the occasion also to discuss some of Schumann's celebrated compositions. such as Carnaval, Scenes from Childhood, and the early songs.

If you want to give somebody a gift of an inexpensive little book, I recommend to you a series called The World of Music. These are exceptionally handsome books richly endowed with beautiful illustrations. some of them in color. They cover such subjects as The Messiah, Chamber Music, The Waltz, etc. The latest. No. 10 in the series. is The Concerto by John Culshaw. It is a very brief account of the art. beginning with Viadana and ending with Bartok. The pictures in this volume are particularly fine. 3 "BESTS" for Garbage Disposers

BEFORE YOU BUY your food waste disposer, ask to see the three big "Bests" that mark the difference between "just another disposer" and "the best that money can buy." Look for this:

1 CONTINUOUS FEED—Can the disposer eliminate waste continuously, without stopping? Or does it have load limits, with starting and stopping between loads? Get the right answer with a Youngstown Kitchens Food Waste Disposer, the Disposer that shreds away waste continuously—as soon as it is fed in (no between-loads stopping and starting).

2 SELF-CLEANING—Automatic reversal of the rotary shredders changes direction of the water swirl for complete self-flushing! Waste is shredded thoroughly into tiny particles that act as a cleansing agent. Super-hard, chrome-plated steel shredders stay sharp and bright!

3 LONG LIFE—Self-reversing action doubles shredder life! Every time you flick the switch, the rotor turns in the opposite direction, giving you two complete sets of cutting edges. No wonder the Youngstown Disposer stays so sharp it can even take small bones!

Install the best in your home—a Youngstown Kitchens Food Waste Disposer, with all the three big "Bests."

FOOD PREPARATION: Peel potatoes, clean fish, trim carrots and do other food preparation tasks, and keep your kitchen clean as you go. Simply turn on cold water, then turn on your Youngstown Disposer whenever you have scraps.

NOTE: Youngstown Kitchens Food Waste Disposer can be used with septic tank of 500 gals. or more capacity.

CLEAN-UP: Scrape food waste directly into the drain while it is still fresh, before it has a chance to become garbage. You can keep your kitchen clean during after-meal clean-up . . . even though you have dozens of plates.

Fits all Youngstown Kitchens Cabinet Sinks and most other modern sinks. For full information, write Dept. F.W.D. 2.

FOOD WASTE DISPOSER

Take It Easy, Lady!

Take advantage of new labor-saving equipment, and improvements in old, and you won't be a slave to housework

by Charlotte Conway

There's more to this new Lewyt vacuum cleaner than meets the eye! It sits on an aluminum "dolly" with rubber casters, known as a Step Saver, because it rolls around so easily. Dolly holds four constantly used attachments: floor and dusting brushes, upholstery and crevice tools. It has a new attachment known as the "101" combination rug nozzle, for use as a vacuum cleaner, or, detached, as a carpet sweeper that never has to be emptied because dirt is whisked into Speed Sak when wands are attached to cleaner. It has a Space Saver, a plastic rack to screw on inside of a closet door or on wall, to hold hose, wands, "101" nozzle, snuffocator, and paint sprayer.

Ever try to remember exactly where in your freezer you put that very special package? The Universal Index-A-File freezer has slots in the back shelf trim for plastic name tabs to guide you unerringly to the food you want. Another convenience is that you may divide the freezer compartment, according to your requirements, into shelves or vertical compartments, thanks to aluminum divider plates. The freezer has 12 cu. ft. capacity, holds 420 pounds of food, takes up a space 47½" wide x 30¼" high, standard height for counters so it gives you extra work space in the kitchen. Built-in lighting,

Now you can throw away the kitchen matches, and with them the fear that Junior will get into trouble with them. Norge has brought out a gas range with electric ignition both for the top burners and for the oven. To light the burners, you press a button on the instrument panel, then turn the gas cock handle. That's all there is to it. In somewhat the same way, to light the oven you press down a lighter lever in the oven, and then turn the oven heat control to ON.

DRAWINGS BY KELLY OECHSLI

You don't have to worry about where to put the control box with the new Westinghouse electric blanket. Of clear plastic, it can go on the night stand, if there's room. But if there isn't, it can go in a special metal hanger to clip to rail or headboard, or even to hang on the wall. Control box has pull switch, a red indicator and a neon signal light to indicate when the switch is turned on. Blanket is double-bed size, with single or dual control, and comes in Evening Rose, Sapphire Blue, and Emerald Green. AC current only.

Small families with small kitchens can still have dishwashers! The Cameron portable is only 16" in diam. x 14" high, sits on the drainboard, drains into sink. It works by water power from your own hot-water tap, so you don't need an electrician or a plumber to install it. Stack the dishes, sprinkle on a little of your favorite soap, and turn on the water. In about five minutes dishes will be clean, you drain soapy water into sink, keep hot water on for rinsing. You can get a lingerie basket insert, and do a simple wash in the same way.

And sounds! I guess an entire contest could be maneuvered around them alone. One of the nicest being a combination of noises that emanates from the living room after the dishes are done and you hear a mixture of sounds which includes intermittent family conversation, the rattling of the funnies on the floor, the crunching of apples, the clicking of knitting needles, the tapping of a pipe against an ash tray, and the droning of the radio to which nobody is listening. Later in the evening, the sound of comparative quiet is also good, when the young have been snugly tucked in and you settle down with the evening paper and the radio to which those who remain downstairs now are listening.

Four thousand miles of good highway thread the scenery, tying the island together for quick, easy sight-seeing. Everywhere, even against the sometimes weird background of Calypso music, the atmosphere, food, customs, costumes, and accent are well-tempered British. Pimm's No. 1 Cup is as much in evidence as Planter's Punch, and your shopping a matter of dividing your customs allowance between handsome British tweeds and unusually well-turned-out and useful native handicrafts. Even the landscape has unusual coherence, with color, line, mass, and texture as cunningly assembled as in a man-made conservatory. When you lay plans for Jamaica, whether through your travel agent or the Jamaica Tourist Development Board, 400 Madison Avenue, New York 17, remember Jamaica's diversity, and learn all about each of its five different resort areas before you make choice.

Hawaii, Maui, Kauai

For a different slant on the Hawaiian Islands, look into passenger accommodations on the Matson Line's inter-island freighter service, a novel, inexpensive, and increasingly popular way to sightsee. Actually, these trips are a continuation of the line's regular Hawaiian cargo-passenger service from West Coast ports—6 days, $125 each way. But if you arrange far enough ahead, you can also board ship at Honolulu either for just the next port of call, or for the full five- to seven-day circle back to Honolulu.

As for all cargo-passenger travel, look before you sign up. The line is very frank about the restrictions it must place on passengers because the ship's main business is freight. But, as is also characteristic of most modern cargo-passenger ships, accommodations are unusually attractive (all outside rooms with bath) and you may be just the type for whom eleven fellow passengers is enough. Since the ship moves by night to permit loading by day, you have maximum daylight time ashore at each port, often enough for extensive sightseeing. And the prices run like this: complete circle, Honolulu to Honolulu via Hilo on Hawaii and Kahului on Maui, $45; via Hilo and Port Allen or Nawiliwili on Kauai, $55; via Hilo and ports on both Maui and Kauai, $65.

Handy hunting

For the many who live next-state to Pennsylvania, the Keystone State offers one of the happiest of hunting grounds. Deer, bear, and smaller game roam its many wilderness areas and increase almost undisturbed except by ambitious camera fans until Nov. 1.

Then, with some variations in different counties, the quail, partridge, grouse, turkey, pheasant, rabbit, and squirrel season opens, followed November 13 through 18 by the bear season. Ducks are legal November 29 to December 9. In fact, Pennsylvania's deer are so prolific that a special season has been proclaimed for November 27 and 28, when antlerless deer may be killed statewide without special permit. Hunters may kill either one antlerless deer or one legal antlered deer, but not both, within the season. For details, names, and addresses of game protectors, a digest of game laws, and a listing of hotels, inns, camps, boarding houses, and other accommodations welcoming hunters, write the Vaca-

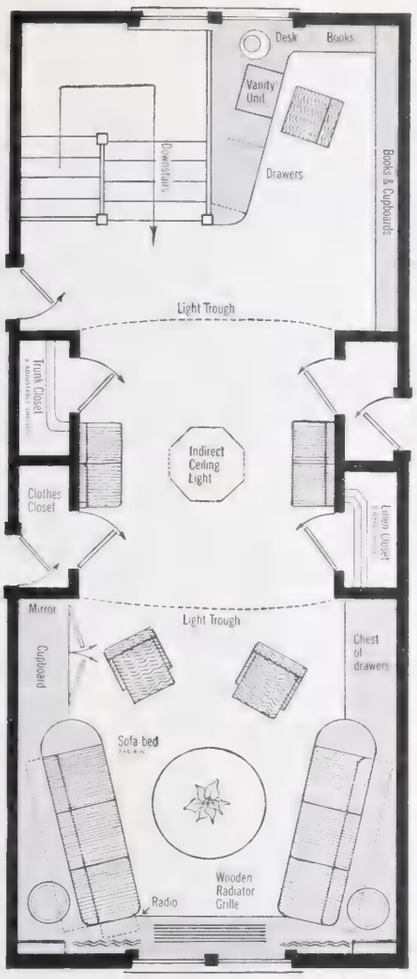
Is there a guest room in your attic?

See how insulation and a clever manipulation of floor space, only 35 by 14 feet, make an extra guest room. Take stock of the waste space under your eaves and discover the potentials of an attic now used only for storage

by Katrina Thomas



The bowling-alley look of a long narrow room is avoided by use of a hung ceiling over central portion and by a series of closets. (See plan.) This divides the space into three sections without cutting it up with partitions. Central light in ceiling illuminates entire room

DECORATOR: HANS WORMA

To save the floor space most of the furniture is built in. Sofa-bed pull out from under bedding boxes for sleeping. Curved wall under the sloping roof, mirrors, and large-scale design in the wallpaper give an illusion of depth and spaciousness in the living section

Plan shows how built-in closets relieve monotony of long flat wall and provide for storage. Remaining attic space is still accessible through them. Plaster does away with drab looks; insulation counteracts the excess heat and cold of most attics.

tion and Recreation Bureau, State Department of Commerce, Harrisburg, for the 1950 edition of "Hunting Accommodations in Pennsylvania."

At home aboard

If that cruise just ahead will be your first, and you will mount the gangplank not knowing fore from aft, here are some standard procedures which will help you feel immediately at home and free to relax and enjoy yourself:

For dining room table assignments, see the Head Steward immediately. There are usually two sittings. The second generally considered a little fancier than the first, if you can wait that long to eat. Take the schedule of meal serving hours seriously; it means what it says. If you're late, you may go hungry. Between-meal snacks on deck are just a plus on the ship.

Deck chairs, rugs, and such niceties are optional, usually at a nominal charge. To reserve yours, see the Deck Steward.

Valuables. Don't leave them in your cabin and worry. The Purser, who is cashier, ticket-taker, and general custodian of financial affairs aboard ship, has facilities for locking them up, either free or for a small charge.

Money. Come prepared, either with cash or traveler's checks. Few ships will cash personal checks, for obvious reasons.

Excess baggage. Clear your cabin by having it stowed in the ship's baggage room.

Wear what you like on deck. But be prepared to enter the dining room respectably covered. Most ships demand it. And do bring evening clothes. Even on the most folksy ship, you'll enjoy dressing up for such galas as the Captain's dinner. On some cruises, while daytime clothes are acceptable at the first sitting, dress is de rigueur at the second.

Sunburn. Be discreet. If you insist on getting it, the ship is understandably inclined to feel neither responsible nor sympathetic.

Tipping. It's usually done just once, at the end of the voyage, and includes not only those who have served you regularly, like your cabin, deck, and dining-room steward, but those who have given you incidental service like bar stewards, elevator operators, page boys. As to the amount, just keep your ears open. As the ship nears home port, it's a major subject of conversation. You will still have to play the whole tipping operation pretty much by ear, anyway, since the authority has yet to be found who is daring enough to make a definite pronouncement on the exact sum a pour-boire should be. It all depends, they say unhelpfully, so suit yourself.

To market

Ask any Mexican market-day enthusiast which is his favorite. If he doesn't quickly answer "Oaxaca," with a gleam in his eye, it is only because this gem among Mexican market towns has hitherto been somewhat off the standard tourist circuit. (Oaxaca, by the way, is pronounced Wa-ha-ka.) Actually, Oaxaca is only 340 miles southeast of Mexico City, about ten hours driving time, and recommended, if only for its good hotels, as a first night's stopover on any trip down the newly opened final span of the Pan American highway to the Guatemalan border.

It is also only 90 minutes from Mexico City by air and overnight by train. And it is a choice city in several ways. It is high in a valley so cool you are advised to wear light woolens from November through February. It is rich in baroque Spanish Colonial architecture, and has its very own superb archaeological ruins near by. But if you like markets, its market is what you'll remember best about Oaxaca.

Although Saturday is full-dress market day, every day finds the crowded sidewalks spread with gay wares: the famous wool serapes made by the Mixtec and Zapotec Indians, delicate filigree earrings, hand-woven rebosas and fiber mats, and pottery, ollas and tableware usually with the characteristic black Oaxaca finish, enchanting animals, sometimes flower containers, sometimes piggy banks—and sometimes just animals.

Even if you don't buy, the Oaxaca market is something to see, and smell, and yes, even to taste. For when you get hungry, you'll find that Oaxaca's tamales are extra delicious because they're wrapped in banana leaves. The tacos are usually crunchy, the cheeses strange but irresistible, and the coffee comes hot and in big, bottomless bowls.

Colonial Christmas

To many, Christmas is the choicest of all times to visit Williamsburg, Virginia. You will see its citizens voluntarily living out the traditions they have inherited along with their architecture, furnishings, and means of livelihood. You will savor completely the significance not only of Williamsburg but of Christmas as well. Observance starts a week before Christmas and lasts through January 6, Twelfth Night. Traditional cedar, pine, and holly garland proud old doorways, traditional lanthorns gleam in high cupolas, and singers with lighted lanterns carol up and down Duke of Gloucester Street.

On Christmas Eve you'll want to light your candle and join in the singing around the community Christmas tree in front of the St. George Tucker house where they placed Williamsburg's first Christmas tree, which, incidentally, was one of America's first.

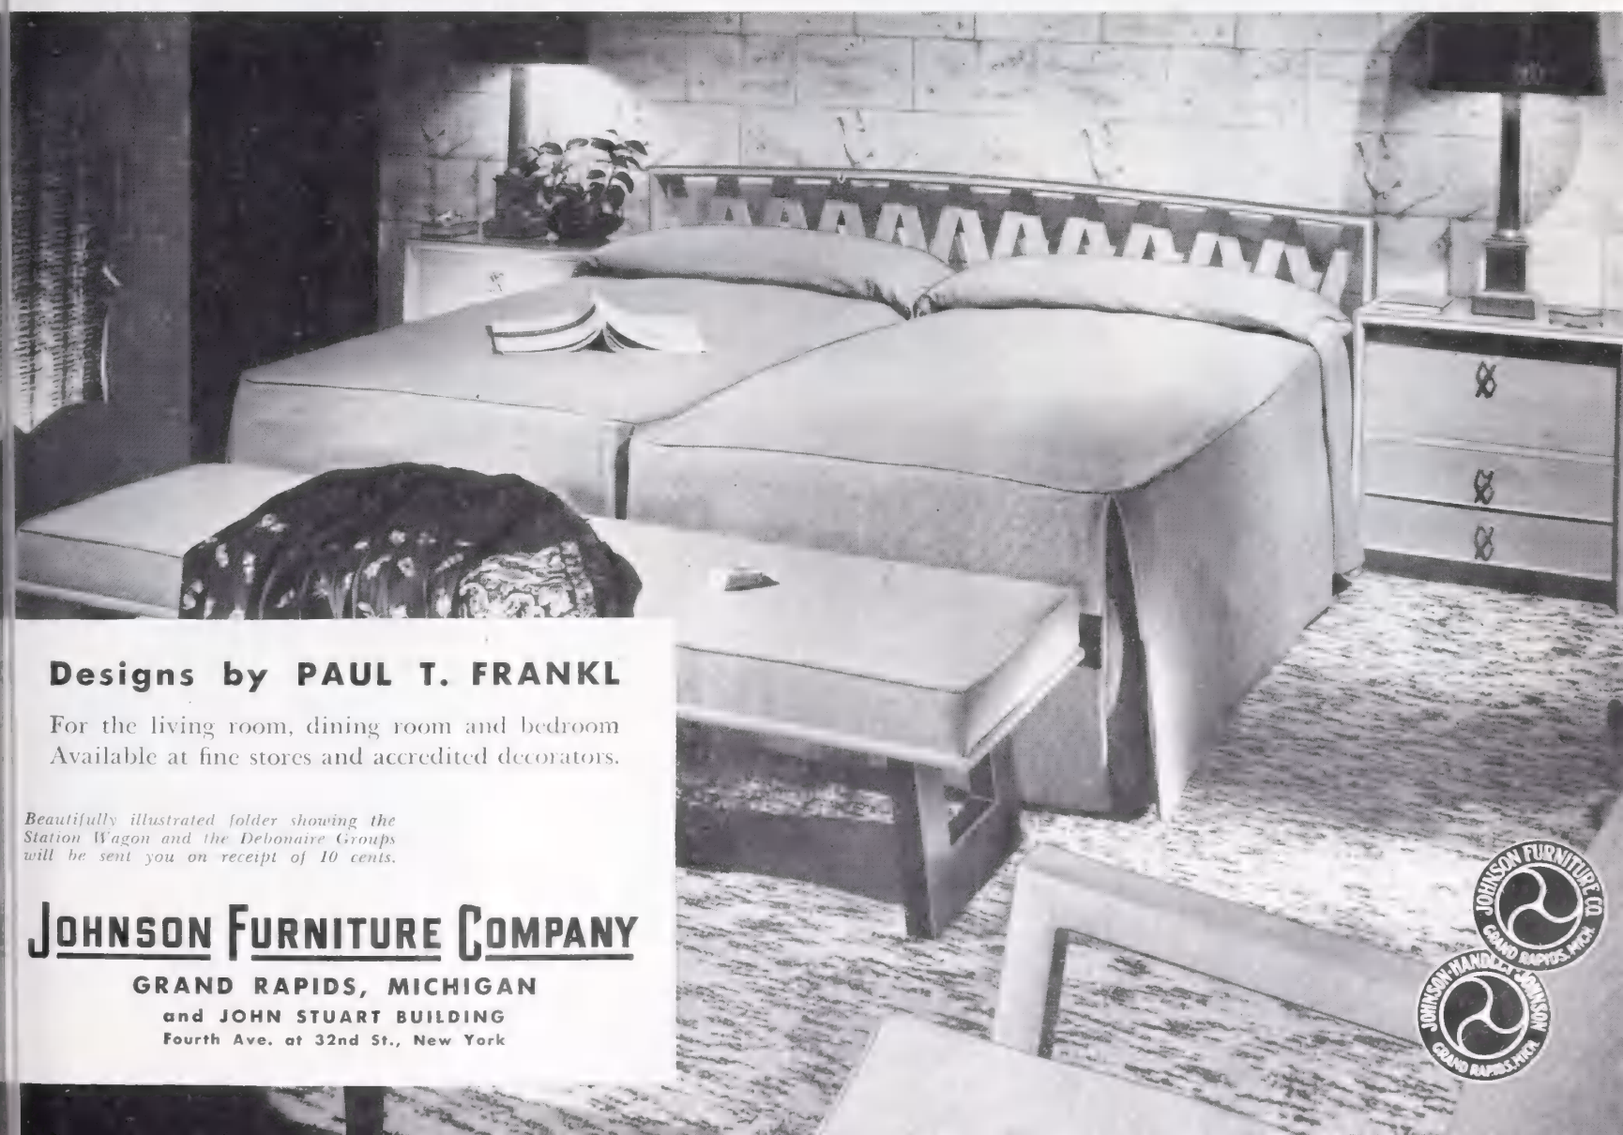
You'll want to be on hand at the Yule Log ceremony to touch the log with your own sprig of holly for good luck, then toss it in the roaring fire. Christmas Day you will divide between an "open house" at the Raleigh Tavern, a holiday dinner at the Inn, a musical by candlelight at the Governor's Palace. And you will want to linger for the holiday finale, when, again traditionally, Williamsburg burns its Christmas trees in a huge bonfire on the green to the accompaniment of fireworks.

Make your reservations early, by writing now to the Reservation Office, Williamsburg Inn and Lodge, Williamsburg, Virginia. Rates are European Plan, from $10 double at the Inn, and from $5 to $10 double at the Lodge. Rooms are also available in several charming colonial taverns. Make inquiries about them.

Boo!

Since half the fun of ghosts is in the anticipation thereof, keep in mind that several of Britain's many historic and beautiful palaces on the tourist list also offer famous and, they do say reliable, ghosts. Hampton Court Palace, ten miles north of London on the Thames, for instance, has not one but three, all of them set in action in one way or another by Henry VIII.

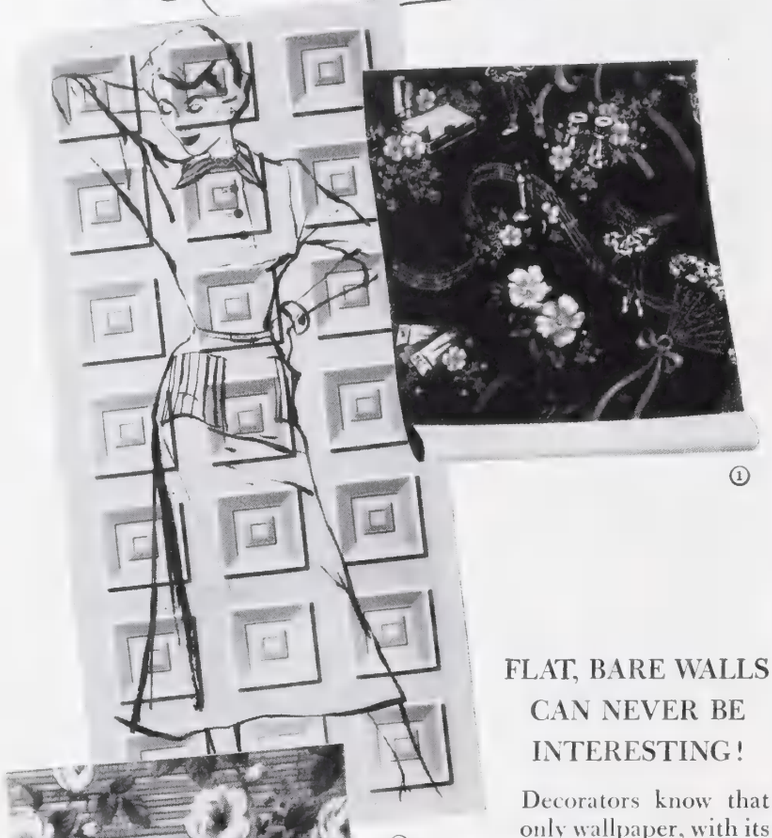
In the Silver Stock Gallery, look for Jane Seymour, his third wife, most often seen carrying a lighted taper. In the southwest wing, whirring and moaning sounds indicate the old nurse of Jane's son Edward VI is again at her spinning wheel. And in the Haunted Gallery, keep a sharp eye out for Katherine Howard, Henry's fifth wife, who every so often again escapes from her room and is returned again, screaming, by the ubiquitous palace guards.



Bass

For the latest among Florida's many and various ways to fish, stop off at Delray Beach and look up Duke Gendreau. Duke, by means of a novel and unique airboat—an aluminum sled powered by an airplane motor, which slithers with equal ease over water and water-soaked grassland—has provided at last the perfect way to penetrate the vast solitudes of the Everglades. These mysterious, weirdly wonderful swamps actually start only a few miles inland from Delray, and are rife with unsuspicious, outsize bass. Standard fishing trips take a half day, at $10 per head, with special tackle and such available. Other airboat trips: a half hour's worth of Everglades sightseeing, 25 miles, $10 for three people; frog hunting after dark at $10 each; and, during the December season, unparalleled duck hunting. Delray Beach, by the way, lies between Miami and West Palm Beach on the east coast highway and is itself a pleasant resort community, distinguished by unusual dignity and peace.

Another Riviera



As Buenos Aires is called the Paris of South America, so Viña del Mar is likened to the French Riviera. This is a fashionable seaside resort five miles from Chile's principal port of Valparaiso, and 90 by train or auto from Santiago. To those for whom Viña del Mar's Municipal Casino, one of the world's largest, is her principal attraction, she is the South American Monte Carlo. Others, more impressed with the blaze of many flowers against a turquoise sea on the one hand and snow-capped mountains on the other, may make it Nice, or Cannes, or what have you. Understandably, Viña del Mar has a fine beach, great natural beauty, and enjoys a kind of patina that is better known as class.

A sundial is a pleasant thing in the garden, but now you'll want to bring one indoors, too. The Sun Dial we mean is the only control you have to set on the Temco automatic gas dryer. You set it at DRY for absolutely dry clothes; at DAMP, when you want them ironing dry, or at somewhere in between to suit your own prescription. Dryer holds 18 lbs. of wet wash, average load dries in from 30 to 45 minutes according to the degree of dryness wanted. Reversible lint trap permits venting either to outside of house, or inside.

Something new in buffets has come along. Palley Mfg. Co. who specialize in kitchen cabinets, have designed a good looking one to go in or near kitchen or dinette. Harmonizing with their cabinets, it has storage drawers for linen or silver, cupboard space for electric toasters and such, or for dishes. It is especially handy to use as a storage wall or divider between kitchen and dining areas. It is counter height, 36", for extra work space, and measures 42" long x 18" deep. Leg supports are of chromium, to match dinette furniture.

We're getting so dial conscious these days we'll soon think we have to turn one on in order to breathe! The latest is the Magic Dial on Hotpoint's new electric water heaters. Turn the dial to blue, or VACATION, to keep water at 120° while you're away, have a hot bath ready and waiting when you return; to yellow for AVERAGE, or 150°, the temperature needed for automatic washers and dishwashers; to red for EXTRA HOT, or 170°, when there are extra hot-water demands. Table height heaters, 30 and 40 gals.

eneral, the montaña's residential listrict is about as cozy as our 'lorida Everglades.

Just forget you ever heard about he montaña, unless, of course, you appen to be an explorer, hunter, ungle-lover, botanist, or a refugee rom the Bureau of Internal Revnue.

What you will like best about 'eru will be the coastal and sierra ones. The costal zone is the home f Lima, the capital city of some 00,000 inhabitants and as beautiil a metropolis as your eyes will ver feast upon.

T NEVER rains in Lima. Honestly! Never! And on $300 a ionth, you can live there like a coon with a minimum of four in ervice. From November through May, which is the Limeños' sumier (seasons are reversed once ou cross the equator), the temerature ranges from 60° to 85° F. For roughly six months, the eather in Lima is perfect. From ay through November, however, neblina or fog settles over the ty, and everyone who can leaves e place and moves south to Areiipa where you can rent a seven-om house furnished for about $40 month. Either that, or they move ick away from the ocean to such perb sun-drenched resorts as iosica and Los Angeles, both of hich are an hour's ride out of ma.

The capital city is located six iles from the Pacific, and its port called Callao. Now, in the Pafic, there runs along the Peruvian ast a current of water called the umboldt Current. It's just like r Gulf Stream except that our ılf Stream is warm, and the Humldt is cold, so cold in fact, that ien it meets up with the hot equarial winds, it causes a fog which ides the sun for weeks and months. That's why you should visit Lima ly during our winter months, om December through April you will find it infinitely more rewarding than, say, a month at Hialeah.

To begin with, it's a city of flowers, wide boulevards, beautiful homes, low prices, good food, excellent theaters, varied sports, and rich historical culture.

The people are well mannered and hospitable. No one looks upon you as a tourist—but as a welcome visitor—and unlike many places, there's no army of sharpies waiting to "take" you at every turn.

The monetary unit of Peru is the sol. All calculations are made in soles. For the past year, one U. S. dollar has been worth approximately 15 soles.

To give you some small idea of how far one U. S. dollar will carry you in Lima, which is the most expensive city in Peru (prices are 40 per cent cheaper in other cities), a taxi fare anywhere in the downtown district averages from seven to twelve cents. Rooms in the three best hotels in Lima, the Crillon, The Gran Bolivar, and the Country Club, can be had for as little as $3 a day. Dinner in a good restaurant will average less than $1.25, and you can rent beautiful homes in Magdalena and San Isidro, two of the most exclusive suburbs, for as little as $200 a month.

In addition, Lima boasts several excellent pensions where the student or artist can get a room, bath, and three meals per day for $60 a month and up.

As a matter of fact, the cost of living in Lima is so low compared to our inflated price set-up in the U. S. that thousands of Americans have moved down there to take advantage of the easier life.

There are approximately 4,000 Americans in Peru, and many of these are pensioned war veterans, artists, students, writers, and retired couples living on fixed incomes, and living a good deal better than they could in New York, Chicago, or Dallas.

Domestic help in Lima averages about $9 per domestic a month, which means that for $36 monthly, you can have four little Peruvians running around your home, doing all the cooking, cleaning, and child-tending.

There are no organized sight-seeing tours in Lima, no high-powered salesmen to disturb your vacation, and no high-pressure public relations men trying to herd you out of one hotel into another.

SIGHT-SEEING is done in a private car, and you can do as much or as little as you like. Taxi drivers, waiters, clerks, telephone operators, all of these are uncommonly civil and will go to great pains to understand your version of Spanish.

The American colony in Lima is also unusually hospitable. Stay in town a few days, and the next thing you know you're on the receiving end of a long list of invitations to cocktail parties. Fellow Americans take great pride in introducing you into the Lima social whirl and tipping you off as to local customs, bargains, and dressmakers.

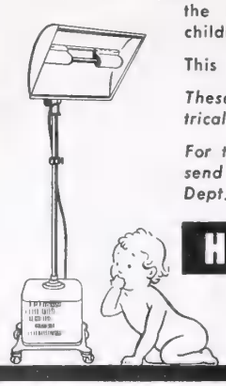
Life in Lima, as in most Latin American countries, moves along at a slow and gracious pace. Shops and offices, for example, are open from 8:30 A.M. to 12:20 P.M., at which time during the warm weather, everything closes down for three hours, and the people go to the beach, golf course, country club, social club, or just settle down in the back-yard hammock for a siesta.

No one can possibly eat lunch in less than two hours, and no one tries. Around four o'clock business starts up again, and the stores stay open until seven. After that comes the cocktail hour which usually lasts a long while, too. Dinner in Lima is rarely served before nine or ten o'clock.

Once you orient yourself to the time schedule, its advantages become apparent immediately. You eat your food slowly, digesting it well instead of bolting it down. In Peru you need surprisingly little sodium bicarbonate. You read the New York Times from cover to cover during your siesta and stay abreast of the latest world developments since the paper's airmail

Many Youngsters Hunger for Sunshine...

This little fellow, confined indoors by inclement winter weather, is looking for some sunshine. He needs the sunshine vitamin for sturdy bones and sound teeth—for healthy growth. Hanovia's Ultraviolet Quartz Health Lamp produces Vitamin D, the sunshine vitamin, in the most effective and pleasant manner. Outdoes the sun in ultraviolet energy all year round.



A few minutes bathing in the healthful ultraviolet rays of a Hanovia lamp will aid in strengthening the youthful body—will create physical fitness to resist common winter ailments.

Only a pure quartz tube, such as used by Hanovia, can produce effectively the beneficial ultraviolet rays so important to growing children.

This is why doctors prefer and prescribe Hanovia Lamps.

These are now available in department stores, surgical, electrical and specialty shops. Deferred payment plan if desired.

For the complete story of ultraviolet and its many benefits send for Hanovia's free booklet, "The Magic of Ultraviolet." Dept. HB-11.

ition is flown down to Peru the me day it appears in New York. Hostesses like the time set-up cause they can entertain at lunch thout being rushed or can take nap in preparation for the social e that awaits at night.

Since domestic help in Peru is reasonable, many of the Ameri- n women currently living there end much of their time, sleeping, cializing, or shopping.

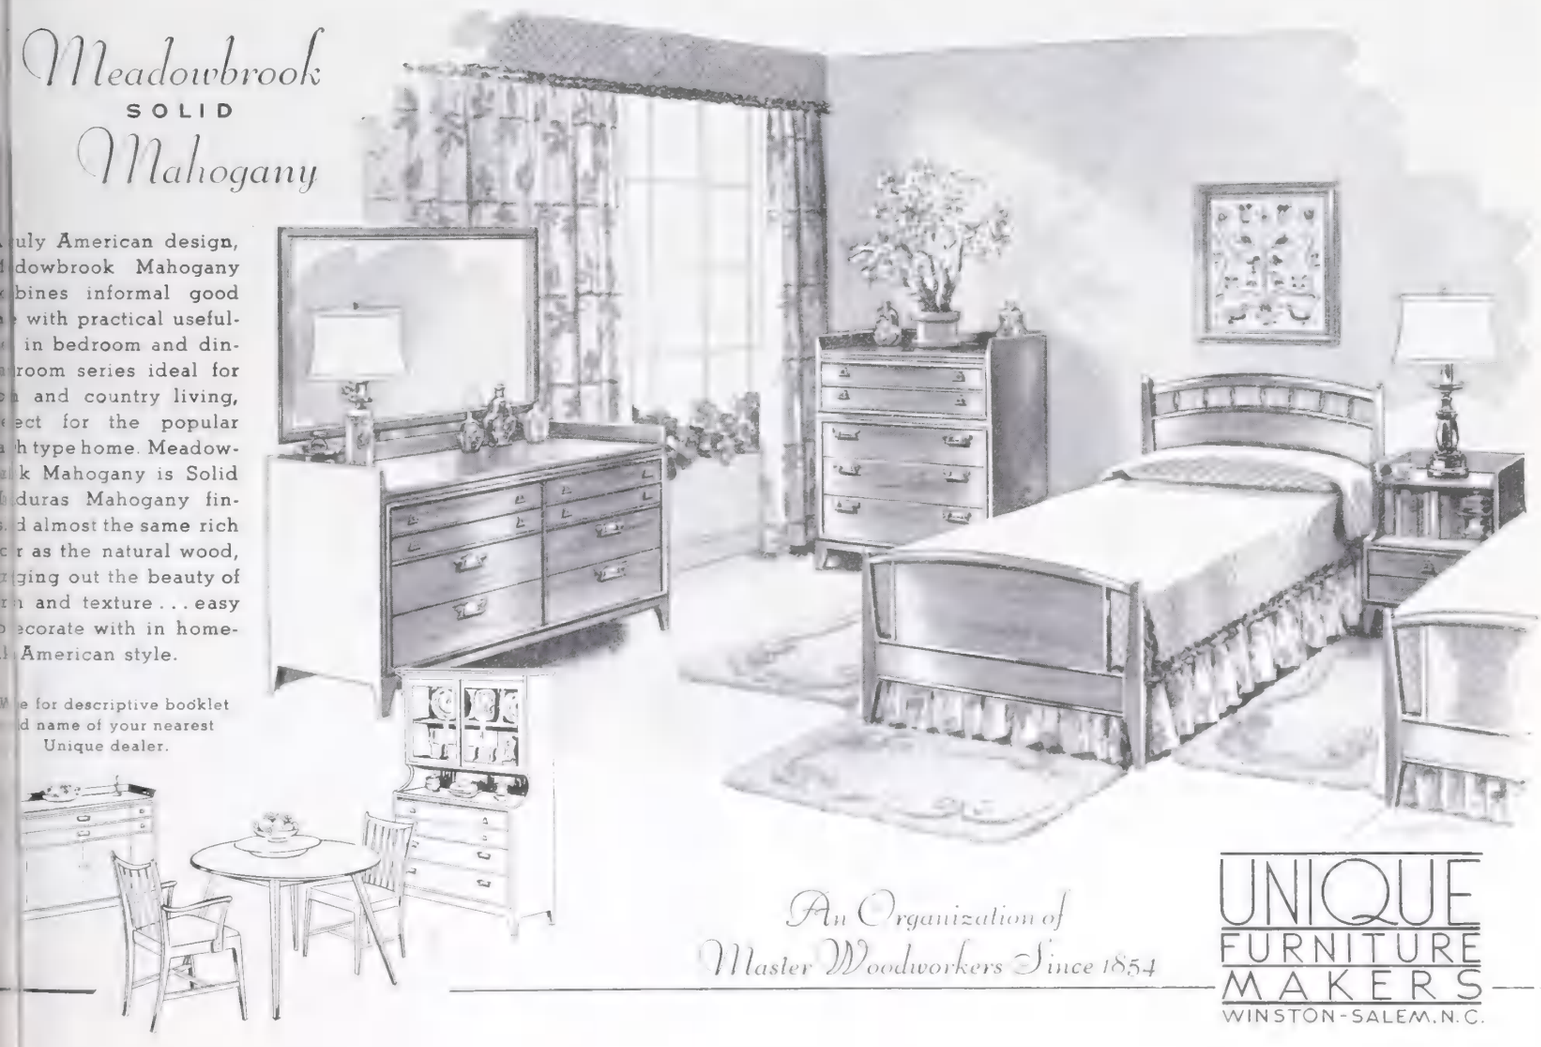
OST of the best shops in Lima are located in a section between Plaza San Martin and the Plaza Armas, called the Jiron Union. is street runs for five blocks, and ng its narrow thoroughfares one ds the finest silver, rugs, linen, ther, and native handicraft shops the country.

n general, most of the Peruvian ver—and there's plenty—is of vy Spanish colonial design, al- ugh one or two shops like the sa Crevani (Mercaderes No. 3) offer handwrought pieces ich are designed by Truman ley, an American who several rs ago organized a Manual Arts titute in Lima.

or our money, the best silver ps in Lima are: S.I.A.M., Jiron on No. 553 (also a branch at airport.) Piaget, La Merced No. 632, Old Cuzco, Union Jiron.

All of these stores have large selections of hollowware and flat- ware, but generally, the prices are approximately what you'd pay in the United States.

One of the best buys in Lima is the thick, soft alpaca wool rug. These are so reasonable that even with your payment of all shipping charges via the Grace Line, say from Lima to New York, a rug will cost you less than one-half of what you will pay for it in the States. You can get a beautiful fantastically thick 9′ x 12′ alpaca rug in Lima for as little as $125; shipping charges will average another $100.



The following stores in Lima offer the best selection of rugs: Clisa, Jiron Lampa No. 865, Oeschle, Plaza de Armas, Casa del Indio, Jiron Union No. 855, Casa Salazar, Calle Boza No. 853-346.

Clisa is also one of the largest dealers in Peruvian linen which has recently become so popular with American decorators. The Casa del Indio and Casa Salazar feature such Indian handicrafts as woolen shirts, sweaters, mittens, fluffy alpaca bedroom slippers, and a flock of Peruvian antiques.

PERU IS FOR PLEASURE

Jiron Ica, is one of several Lima stores that specializes in native pelts. One of the best leather goods establishments is owned by Pedro P. Diaz, Jiron Ucayali No. 118; he also has a shop out at the Limatambo Airport.

You are not going to fly or sail 3,000 miles to Peru merely because the country is jammed with bargains, not unless you're a buyer for Macy's, Gimbel's, or Marshall Field's. We realize that. You will, however, consider it as a possible vacation spot if the country's way of life appeals to you. A basic part of that way involves food.

TO BEGIN with, the water in Peru is untrustworthy. This is true of the water in most Latin-American countries, and one is much safer drinking bottled water con or sin gas (with or without carbonation). Once you get accustomed to ordering bottled water with every meal you're set.

Let's say, for example, that like most tourists you've spent a morning in downtown Lima shopping. Since the stores close down at 12:30, you've got to stop. At this point, a good meal is in order.

The best Peruvian dishes in town are served in the dining room of the Gran Hotel Maury on Jiron Carabaya. You don't have to live there, but you certainly must eat there. The food is the equal of any restaurant in the world. The manager of the Hotel, Antonio Bergna is one of those warm gentlemen of great charm who dotes on foreign visitors. Smile at him, and he will order you a gourmet's delight.

You start with a pisco sour, the national cocktail. A few of these and you're ready for the chupe or thick soup. You follow this with corvina, a tasty white fish cooked with tomatoes and onions, avocado stuffed with shrimp, a tenderloin steak with hot cheese sauce, a dessert of fresh fruit. The whole shebang may come to $1.50, drinks and all.

After lunch, you have your choice of relaxation. You can taxi out to the Country Club of Lima—they're extremely courteous about providing guest privileges—and you can swim, play tennis or golf, or just loll about. Or you can drive down to the beach and go surf bathing. Or better yet, you can just return to your room in the hotel or pension and go to sleep.

If you're a man, you won't find very much trouble in securing guest privileges at the National Club or the Phoenix Club, facing the Plaz San Martin; and here you ca while the afternoon away readin drinking, smoking, playing bi liards, or simply dozing with a cop of the Miami Herald or the Londo Times on your lap.

For some strange reason—"W have no desire to end up as th richest men in the graveyard," on Peruvian explained to me—no on in Peru, except possibly a fe Americans and Englishmen, has th slightest wish to make a millio dollars.

Close to 46 per cent of all Per vians are pure Indian, while 5 per cent are either whites or me tizos, with mixed blood of the whi and Indian races, and the remai ing 1 per cent are Negro an Oriental.

Perhaps this blood mixtu doesn't tend toward infusing th native populace with North Ame can drive, energy, and ambitio but, in a way, this makes for more pleasant existence since affords a greater peace of mind the average resident who sees sense in living every day as if were his last.

The philosophy of Benjam Franklin is a little out of place Peru. Ever since the Spaniards co quered the country and despoil it, the vast Indian population h borne the brunt of oppression an social injustice. Things are mu better today, but it's still the I dian who does most of the hea work in Peru and provides t country with its color.

Treated fairly, the Indian is kin courteous, moderately industriou and a passionate lover of his lan his llamas, and his family.

Over the centuries, he's had l land stolen, his labor exploited, l country's resources controlled foreign capital, mostly U. S. an British, and, under the circu stances, his lack of drive and a bition is understandable. It is th reluctance to push, fight, compe and drive a hard bargain whi gives the country its character.

PERUVIANS believe that time only for slaves and that inh pitality is an unforgivable sin. course, there are a few old pu Spanish families in Lima, descen ants of the exploiters and sell of cocaine to the smugglers, w refuse to socialize with the Ame can residents or visitors, but th are gradually dying out.

Hostesses who succeed n having all parts of a meal turn ut in good time and at the peak f perfection are not really miracle omen but astute menu-planners. hey avoid meats that need last-inute cooking. WHEN you plan your vegetables, choose the untemperamental ies that don't demand stop-watch ooking or last-minute attentions om you. This automatically rules it asparagus, broccoli, Brussels routs, and cauliflower if you want serve a hot vegetable. These are particularly sensitive to overcooking, collapsing miserably with one split second's extra heat, losing their crispness, color and flavor. This shouldn't put them completely out of the running for party menus, however, for if you cook them ahead of time and serve them cold they can be delicious and decorative courses, and practically trouble-free, because they are out of your way before the guests arrive.

Don't be afraid that you are serving too little food. This kind of worry can lead you into serious problems because you will be tempted to add another and yet another course to your menu until you will have more bits and pieces to prepare and serve than your kitchen and service facilities can cope with. So simple a miscalculation as too many dishes for too few burners on the stove can lead to disaster.

If you have been schooled in the old-time tradition that it isn't a party unless the guests are overwhelmed by the quantity and variety of the food, you may find it hard to settle for simplicity. But you must remember that that philosophy of entertaining was born in the days when servants were plentiful and it was possible to keep the quality as high as the quantity. Today, unless you are an exception to the general rule, you must choose between quantity and quality and, of course, quality is your only choice. Once you accept this fact, forgetting the outmoded notions of another era, you have nothing to fear. You will recognize that a bowl of excellent peasant soup, a salad and a dessert of fruit can be the makings of a truly festive lunch or supper. And if the soup is dramatized in your grandmother's soup tureen, if the salad is crisp and tantalizing and served with dash in Chinese bowls or on maple plates, such a simple but perfect menu may even establish you as a history-making hostess.

Present your food with verve and eye-appeal—in unusual dishes, for instance, and in ways that play up the food's color and texture. But no matter what you serve it in, serve it with authority, as if its success were preordained. Once a dish is served forth, nothing you can say can make it taste better, but apologies can make it taste much worse. A hostess's fears are usually ill-founded, but even if something should go awry, why be prostrated simply because it happens in the presence of guests? After all, aren't these your friends, gathered in your home for anticipated fun and relaxation? Better laugh off the contretemps and relax with the company.

ONE of the best ways to conquer your fears as a hostess is to stop being cowed by the Usual Order of Things. There are certain components in a menu—appetizer, soup, entree, salad, dessert—but there is no reason why you must always serve all courses or serve them always in the same order. Use your menus like modern sectional furniture. Push the courses around. Combine them to fit a variety of needs. For a luncheon, for example, change the regular menu sequence and serve a vegetable as a first course. Try rice and peas masked in a cheese sauce, followed by hot or cold meat and a salad, ending with a dessert of hot apple sauce. No matter how it appears on the little menu lists you see in cookbooks and magazines, a luncheon or a dinner does not always have to end with a dessert. And why not try serving salad with cheese instead of after the meat? Or start a dinner with a first course of jellied shrimp, shaped in a mold and garnished with cucumbers and whole kernel corn and mayonnaise. There are countless ways of changing the all too usual order of things, and once you've got over the delusion that a menu is a sacrosanct, untouchable ritual, you won't be afraid to juggle courses imaginatively.

Apply that same imagination to the service of party meals, and you'll overcome the nagging notion that you can't entertain elegantly unless you're fortified with a staff of servants. A buffet is one way of leading your guests gently to the business of helping themselves, but it must be a well organized buffet, consisting of a few beautiful dishes easily manipulated with spoon and fork.

More satisfactory yet, in my opinion, is the tray meal which can move as smoothly as clockwork if each guest is provided with a completely and attractively set tray or tray table, and if the hostess herself serves the meal from a moving cart. In the absence of servants this is standard procedure in my house.

FOR all its simplicity, this kind of service can have great style if you set each tray as meticulously as you would a place at a dinner table, and if you serve the food from imaginative serving dishes. I give each tray its own tiny pepper and salt, sometimes a flower, and often its own candle, actually one of those stubby vigil lights in a glass. When the tray candles are lighted and the room's main light are out, the effect is stylish beyond words, besides giving the gathering an air of infectious festivity.

Just don't be afraid. You probably don't know your own capabilities as a hostess, but as a starter try the two typically unafraid menus on page 233. The recipes to help you bring them off follow.

Chicken in the Pot

2 broiler chickens, 3 to 3½ pounds, cut in quarters
6 medium carrots, coarsely grated
1 teaspoon salt; pepper to taste
2 tablespoons flour smoothed into 4 tablespoons water
1 pound onions cut in small pieces
Chicken stock
2 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon curry powder
1 pint sour cream

Make chicken stock by cooking the giblets and feet in 2 cups of water, covered, for ½ hour.

Rub chicken with salt and sprinkle with paprika. Heat 4 tablespoons of butter or Wesson oil in a Dutch oven (no household should be without one) and brown the chicken until lightly tinged all over, keeping the browned pieces warm while cooking the others. Add to the pot ½ cup of stock, the grated carrots, onions, salt, sugar, and 2 or 3 dashes of pepper. Lay the quartered chicken on top, cover and cook at a moderate pace, turning once, for ¾ of an hour (or until chicken is tender). Remove the chicken, keep it cosy and warm. Increase the heat under liquid until vegetables bubble. Stir in the smoothed flour, add curry, if used. Add the lemon juice. Bring to a boil. Lower the heat, add the sour cream, and stir until blended and heated. Replace the chicken on top and keep over low heat until ready to serve. Place the chicken in a casserole or deep platter. Surround with the sauce and minced parsley.

Celery and Bean Salad

1 pound of green string beans
2 small bunches of white celery or 1 large bunch of green Pascal celery
1 tablespoon snipped chives or 1 tablespoon snipped dill
1 chopped egg

Wash and cut off ends of the beans, leaving them whole. Scrape and cut celery in 3-inch lengths, ½-inch wide. Boil celery for ½ hour. Drain and chill. Cook beans until tender. Drain and chill.

Arrange an even amount of both celery and beans in 6 piles, like asparagus, on beds of shredded lettuce. Scatter chopped egg mixed with chives over each serving.

The beans and celery may be prepared in the morning or a day ahead and kept covered. The vegetables can be arranged on a platter and be all ready in the refrig-

Fix up your foyer

Your foyer presents a first impression of your house, so it should be more than just a dull passageway. Here's a good example to copy

WHEN he moved into his ground-floor studio, decorator James L G. Mitton was confronted with a real problem-foyer. It was oddly shaped, unusually narrow and dark. He started by re-doing the floor, using wallpaper in a green and white block design. (He made it practical to walk on with six coats of shellac.) He mirrored one wall of the alcove and installed a shelf console, nothing more than a decorative bracket with a shaped wood top. Again wallpaper came to the rescue. He covered the console top in a handsome green marbleized paper with a washable finish.

A display shop made the unusual swinging door. It is actually two scrollwork panels from a three-fold screen plus an extra small panel.

At the wide end of the foye Mr. Mitton hung a wallpaper mura in greens and coral on white. T supply much-needed light, he fitte plant boxes with concealed light ing and placed them on the floor With the addition of a small roun table and two good-looking chairs the alcove now serves as an honest to-goodness room. Mr. Mitton ha bitually keeps an arrangement o leaves or flowers on the consol table, adding to the "lived-in" at mosphere of his foyer.

Why not follow this exampl and let your imagination take over With so many interesting wall papers and floor coverings avail able it should be easy. Once yo begin, you'll have a lot of fu fixing up the foyer.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BILL JACKSON

• To make this long, narrow, and dark foyer interesting, Mr. Mitton has used eye-deceiving tactics. Mirrored left wall makes the alcove seem twice as wide, block pattern of the wallpapered floor gives architectural spaciousness. Light shines through the scrollwork swinging door to welcome you as you enter. Note effective wall console.

• Shown reflected in the expanse of mirror is the opposite side of the alcove. Wallpaper mural makes the wall intriguing, and plant boxes on the floor cleverly conceal lighting. It's an "extra room"—a pleasant place for a game of chess or even a tea party for two.

House Beautiful's Decorating Advice Service

If you want expert advice on decorating or refurnishing your home, consult an expert—Elaine Neal

You haven't seen an announcement of our Decorating Advice Service for one whole year. That doesn't mean the Service has died an ignominious death! The fact is that we cannot publicize it regularly for the volume of mail becomes too heavy for Mrs. Neal to keep up with it.

This is not a service handled by a department or group of people. It is a truly personal service done by one person for one person. In other words, every room is visualized as a unit and seen through one pair of eyes. If a group of people handled the mail with one person doing color, for instance, and one fabrics, and one furniture placement, there could be no continuity, for each one would see things from a special angle—a different viewpoint.

Therefore, we ask you to be patient with us when the answers do not reach you within the three- or four-week limit. Mrs. Neal tries to get them out as promptly as possible, but at certain seasons—spring and fall—the mail piles up so that the time lapse can be quite long. And the only fair thing is to answer the letters in their turn.

Try to send in your plans and information well ahead of the date by which you wish to complete your rooms, and follow the directions on the opposite page carefully.

WHAT YOU DO

1. Send us a floor plan drawn to ¼"-inch scale, showing window and door placements, giving measurements and dimensions, ceiling height, and distances fireplaces or jogs extend from wall. Indicate the location of radiators, pipes, and electric outlets. Tell us the kind of windows you have, whether sash or casement, small or large panes, the distance of sills from the floor. Tell us in what direction the windows face.

2. List your favorite colors, and tell us which styles of decoration and furniture you prefer. Describe the furnishings you wish to keep and what you desire to buy new. Tell us whether your taste leans to wallpaper or paint.

3. Describe your location, whether city, suburban, or country. If there is a particular condition which must affect your choice of furnishings, please mention it. State your problems clearly in separate paragraphs. The more carefully you follow the instructions, the more helpful you will find the decorating advice you receive.

gious. Take Baron Von Schoeler, for example. The Baron is a collector of pre-Columbian art. Tell him you're interested in seeing his superb collection and without another word you're invited to his place for cocktails. These usually last from 7:30 until 10:00 P. M.

The Baron has the finest collection of huachos (religious ceremonial pottery) pre-Inca textiles, antique jewelry, and Indian headdresses in Lima. His acquisitions are all beautifully and intelligently mounted in anticipation of the time when he intends to give his art treasure over to a public trust.

On the evening we visited the Baron, he had as guests an artist, a retired telephone operator from A. T. & T., and a summer student from the University of San Marcos, the oldest university in the Americas, begun in 1151, nearly a century before John Harvard thought a college might be a good idea in Massachusetts. The Baron didn't know any of these people very well, but since they were interested in Peruvian culture, his apartment was open to them.

Because of Peru's long history, the country is figuratively loaded with culture. In Lima alone there are 67 churches, each with some architectural or historical distinction that merits a visit. There are also 102 motion picture houses, average admission 25 cents.

Most of Lima's old mansions are Andalusian and Moorish in architecture, having been built around patios. All of the new building, however, is modern in design.

The best example of the old-fashioned Moorish influence in design can be found in the Torre Tagle palace in Jiron Ucayali. Modern architecture is best represented in the home construction currently under way in San Isidro and Magdalena.

THE mode of naming streets in the old section of Lima is interesting and dates back to colonial times. Each street has its own name, and a series of contiguous ones makes up the jiron or district. The National City Bank of New York, for example, which floated a good many Peruvian bonds in the boom days of the 1920s, is located in the Jiron Carabaya, a good place to cash your travelers' checks.

A street with the name Siete Pecados, seven sins, was named thusly because seven Spanish beauties once lived on it. A street named El Huevo, the egg, got its name because a hen once laid a tremendously large egg there. La Faltriquera del Diablo, the devil's pocket, is a memorial to a Spanish nobleman who refused to confess his death bed sins until a passing friend gave him a shot of liquor. Then he left half of his money to the Church. When a monk heard of this, he said, "We've just snatched a soul from the devil's pocket."

EVERYWHERE you go in Lima, you find yourself holding hands with the past. The National Museum of Archaeology near the Plaza 2 de Mayo, houses more than 50,000 items, including such collections as the Larco Herrera, the Max Uhle, and priceless examples of the best in Inca and Pre-Inca cultures.

The Colonial Museum on the Plaza Bolivar houses relics of the Inquisition Tribunal and mementos from the earliest Spanish settlements.

The Museum of Anthropology also on Plaza Bolivar contains a collection of quipus or knotted cords which were employed by the Incas instead of a written language.

There are museums, gardens, libraries, schools, plazas, churches, and other cultural monuments scattered all over Lima, and for years now, hundreds of U. S. school teachers have spent their Sabbaticals in Peru, taking summer courses at the University of San Marcos in pre-Columbian, Spanish Colonial, and modern Peruvian civilization.

For the visitor who prefers entertainment to education, Lima offers bullfights every Sunday and holiday afternoon from December through February, horse-racing, greyhound racing, cockfights, tennis, soccer, golf, bathing, and polo.

There are also three or four night clubs and some excellent Chinese restaurants, the best of these, according to our taste buds, being Men Yut at No. 715 Ucayali and Ton-Pho at No. 774 Ucayali.

For afternoon tea, the Country Club and the lounge at the Gran Hotel Bolivar seemed best to use. The Hotel Crillon, an air-conditioned job, is the newest hotel in Lima, but the Gran Hotel Bolivar on Plaza San Martin is the focal point for most foreigners and also contains a bath with every room.

Good as the food is in the public eating places of Lima, it's even better in the private homes. The native cuisine is highly seasoned and contains such indigenous food as tamales, serviches, a fresh fish seasoned with chili and raw onion; chupe, a fish stew consisting of egg, milk, shrimps, olive, green corn, and fried fish: cau-cau, tripe with potatoes, rice, chile, and parsley: and ollucos con charque, a stew of meat and ollucos, a potato peculiar to Peru: and manjarblanco, a pudding of milk, eggs, and sugar: pan de dulce, a cake prepared for Holy Week: and dozens of native fruits including avocados, mangoes, guava, quince, chirimoya, papaya, pineapples, dates, custard apples, and many varieties of citrus.

As for drinks, aguardiente, the native favorite, is made from distilled sugar-cane juice; pisco is a native brandy: and chicha de jora, a corn liquor, is very reasonable and, therefore, popular with the Indians.

BESIDES indulging yourself in native foods, you will find, after a few days in Lima that you adapt very quickly to the Limeño customs. You'll be pleased to learn that traffic violations are not handled individually, but are noted and recorded for twelve months. At the end of a year, you're sent your traffic bill. In the case of an automobile smash-up, the driver isn't held. His car is taken into custody. Since new cars are very hard to get, this is punishment indeed.

From time to time, Lima suffers from earthquake tremors but no more so than Southern California. In the mountains, however, the earthquakes are pretty severe.

There is, of course, much more to Peru than Lima, just as there is more to France than Paris. Twenty miles south of the city, for example, lies Pachacamac, believed to be one of the sacred towns of the pre-Inca state, and less than 15 miles in the opposite direction stand the ruins of Cajamarquilla, an ancient city built of adobe. The age-old graves are so shallow in both of these sites that contemporary tourists occasionally unearth a bit of pottery or bone dating from the Ninth Century.

Arequipa

Arequipa with 90.000 inhabitants, is the second largest city of Peru. It's situated at an altitude of 7.500 feet in the valley of the Rio Chil and is surrounded by three spectacular mountains. El Misti, a volcano, 19.162 feet high; Chachani, 20.000 feet; and Pichu-Pichu, 18.000 feet.

Arequipa is frequently called the White City because most of its

FOR ROOM INTEREST

(a thumbnail sketch for successful decorating)

■ In a well planned room, textures and patterns are chosen for interest and contrast. The handsome Sieling Modern bedroom group shown here has unusual texture interest in the leather panels and satiny wood finish. It suggests a decorating scheme employing plain colors for large surfaces with texture interest dominating the plan. A rough, nubby material for draperies and spread would be a suitable complement to the furniture textures. With this scheme, patterns should be used sparingly, on smaller surfaces and objects. What a lovely bedroom . . . modern, restful, but with a distinctive appeal!

SIELING MODERN NO. 139 BEDROOM GROUP—the perfect selection for the master bedroom. Handsome leather panels for the masculine touch; graceful proportions and exquisite finish to appeal to feminine tastes. Key your room to this charming group in French grey or cordovan mahogany. For $100 a month, life in Arequipa can be very beautiful. The Hotel Arequipa, run by the tourist bureau, will look after you very nicely for $2 a day, while Tia Bates, a wonderful old American lady from upper New York, who runs a pension, can do even better than that. Aunty Bates first came to Arequipa more than forty years ago with her husband, an English mining engineer. When he died, she turned her home into a pension which for years has been world-famous.

In addition to its climate, Arequipa attracts visitors who want to live lavishly on very little money and who prefer genuine bargains in the purchase of leather goods, rugs, and textiles. The market in the Plaza de Armas is the site of most buying and selling.

If you stay in Peru any length of time, Arequipa should go on your must list. The prices are absolutely incredible. A first-class domestic costs $4.50 a month. That's just a sample.

Trujillo

Few travelers to Peru ever visit the northern coast, and this is a sad mistake. According to Peruvian veterans, the climate and scenery around Trujillo, fourth largest city in the country, is relatively unbeatable.

Trujillo is a day's motor trip from Lima and only a few hours by plane. It boasts approximately 45,000 persons and was founded by Francisco Pizarro who named it after his home town in Spain.

In addition to beautiful churches and impressive colonial residences, it offers one of the best bathing beaches in Peru, Las Delicias. The sand is white and the water is warm.

Three miles from Trujillo lie the ruins of the strange Pre-Inca city called Chan-Chan. In the early Fifteenth Century when the Incas were at the height of their power, they conquered Chan-Chan which was then the capital of the Chimu or Mochica kingdom. They found gigantic walls more than 50 feet high protecting the city, and, when they finally entered, they discovered that the grand Chimu had built a palace which contained more than 500 rooms, many of which were lined with gold leaf. In the sacred burial grounds, they found many ornaments made of gold. The metal meant relatively little to the Incas, but when Pizarro and his band of conquerors hit town, they removed more than $15,000,000 worth of treasure from the mounds. Because Peru's coast is a rainless desert for the most part, this ancient city existed for centuries long after all its people had died and the Spaniards had finished their plundering.

Also near Trujillo is Chiclin, an enormous sugar plantation owned by the Larco Herrera family, one of the wealthiest in Peru. The plantation is in reality a small city with hospital, cinema, school, railroad station, breeding ranch and a museum housing specimens which cover 2,500 years of history.

The museum is its greatest attraction, and archaeologists the world over have come to see its collection of mummies which are so wonderfully preserved that they refuse to deteriorate despite exposure to the elements. If you'd like to know how your ancestors lived 2,000 years ago, the Larco Herrera museum in Chiclin will give you surprising indications.

Cuzco and Machu-Picchu

Of all the cities in Peru, Cuzco holds the greatest interest for tourists—and rightly so. Because of the magnificent stone remains dating from the time when it was the capital of the Inca Empire, Cuzco is known as the archaeological center of South America. Literally right on top of the solid Inca stonework are the lavish colonial buildings built by the Spanish conquerors who acquired great wealth and lived lavishly there. If this is no reason enough for traveling 300 miles into the Andes, the contemporary city of Cuzco is equally fascinating because of the Quechua Indians who live in and around the city and who are so little touched by modern influences. In addition, the scenery in this part of the Andes is breathtakingly beautiful.

The trip to Cuzco can be made slowly but spectacularly by the Southern Railway through Arequipa and into the Sierra by way of Puno. This mode of traveling is exciting but rigorous. The train passes along some of the highest and most memorable railroad track in the world, and en route you can breathe only with the aid of oxygen. But in all fairness it's the kind of trip you're glad you've made but wouldn't want to repeat. By comparison the entrance into Cuzco by plane is easy, pleasant, and a very thrilling sight.

From the air Cuzco looks like one solid roof of henna tile rimmed by a bowl of green hills. On ground, however, it is a maze of narrow, cobbled streets, numerous plazas, and historical landmarks. Cuzco was also the scene of a severe earthquake earlier this year which damaged many of the famous old structures.

VISITORS in Cuzco live in the modern three-story government-owned-and-operated Hotel de Turismo, but their days are spent sightseeing among the ruins of a remote and tantalizing past.

On the hills overlooking the city are the remains of the Inca fortress Sacsahuaman, and amphitheatre, and Inca baths which still function. All of these structures were built of such gigantic stones (some weighing 20 tons) that present-day archaeologists are baffled as to how the Indians possibly moved and fitted them together so tightly.

Inside the city are many examples of Inca stonework which the Spanish conquerors incorporated into their own buildings. The most conspicuous example is the Temple of the Sun.

While staying in Cuzco it is worth while to hire a car and visit the neighboring towns in the Urabamba valley. Pisac, the nearest village, is best seen on Sunday because of its colorful church procession and its Sunday market. Calca, a larger town, also has a Sunday market in which it's fun to bargain with the Indians for woolens, pottery, and knitted goods. Farther along the valley is the drowsy town of Ollantaytambo, which was once a fortress outpost protecting Cuzco from the enemy invaders. Remains of the fortress may be seen on the hillside above the town.

But the culmination of the trip to Cuzco is the visit to Machu-Picchu. According to archaeologists, this wonderfully preserved city of white stone was the final retreat for the Inca nobility who wanted to hide from the conquerors. The Spaniards never found the city and it remained hidden until 1911 when professor Hiram Bingham of Yale University found it by chance.

The fabulous city is still relatively inaccessible. As a rule, tourists make the trip in one day and it involves getting up at a chilly predawn and traveling 30 miles in a bus on rails. The last hour of the trip is up a steep mountain trail by burro. Even those who make the trip in chilling rain agree that it's worth any discomfort.

All of Cuzco is so intriguing and so unlike any other sight that the temptation is to visit every stone and mud hut in the city. Herein lies the danger of the trip. Cuzco is located at an altitude of 11,500 feet. Breathing is difficult. Exertion the first day almost always ends in siroche or mountain sickness.

If you suffer any heart trouble or anemia, Cuzco is definitely dangerous. If you don't, rest and acclimate yourself at least 24 hours before you attempt the rough and unforgettable trip to Machu-Picchu.

Travel preparations

If you're going to South America, the first thing you need is a passport. The primary requisite for a U. S. passport is a birth certificate, two passport photographs, and a $9 money order payable to the Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

It will take you anywhere from two weeks to a month to obtain your passport. Once you get it, you must apply for a visa at the Peruvian Consulate. There is one in New York, Los Angeles, and several other large cities. Your travel agent or the Braniff Airlines can get you a visa pretty quickly.

In order to get the visa, you need a vaccination certificate from your physician and a letter stating that you are in good physical and mental health. It is also wise to be immunized by your physician for typhoid, cholera, and yellow fever. The U. S. Public Health service will immunize you against yellow fever and also supply you with an International Health Card listing the dates of all your inoculations.

Also, get a letter from your local police chief stating that you have no criminal record and a letter from your bank explaining that you have sufficient financial means to prevent your becoming a public charge.

With these documents, your tickets, travelers' checks, and a half-dozen extra passport photographs just in case you should want to visit other countries, you're ready to leave.

All airlines permit you 66 pounds of luggage, but ships make no such weight restrictions. If you travel light, 66 pounds are more than enough. It's a good idea to take along one empty bag, this to be filled with your foreign purchases.

For Peru in general and Lima in particular, you will need lightweight clothes, the kind and type you might take to Los Angeles. In the late afternoon, the Limeños place considerable emphasis o dressing fashionably. If you're g ing to a cocktail party or meetin someone for tea at the Bolivar, yo won't want to come in a "littl cotton." Dark sheers and tailore silk dresses are more the thin Strictly formal outfits, howeve aren't necessary.

For the trip to Cuzco in th Andes you need warm, winte clothes—heavy sweaters, flann pajamas, heavy-duty walking shoe and a pair of slacks or levis if yo plan to make the trip via burro t Machu-Picchu.

Peru may be reached fro the U. S. by air via Braniff Ai lines or Pan American Grac Airways. Fares start from aroun $350 one way, although freque air excursions result in low prices. The Grace Line also h steamers leaving from Los Angel and New York. Rates start at $4(and $445 one way, respectivel Ships of the Gulf & S. A. Steamshi Company depart from New Orlea at $335 one way. All these pric were true a few months ago, b may have changed since then.

Our travel preference was wi Braniff Airlines, largely becau they had the only DC-6 in oper tion to Peru at the time we took t trip.

However you go, you may re assured that in time and vacati money you've made a rich and r warding investment.

It is also the reason why our indigenous American architecture, spearheaded by Sullivan and Wright, is based on the principles of structure which underlie all natural forms.

Nature is the very core of our emerging American Modern architectural style. When principles of structure are taken from nature (rather than from tradition or convention, or from the forms of earlier buildings or from the forms of machines), it is use which determines the architectural form. In such organic architecture, the criterion of beauty is the subordination of the parts to the whole and the consistency and harmony of the whole. In architecture, founded on natural principles of organization, use and beauty will be the same. Just as in nature, everything is useful and everything is beautiful. Nothing is put in just for effect.

This is the underlying character of our emerging American architecture style: infinite variety, the means beautifully adapted to the ends, buildings whose aim is to work, rather than to serve as impressive symbols, like the grandeur of the church or the power of the state. Out of such organically sound workability comes beauty to feed the emotions.

So our American Modern architecture is not limited to a fixed style. Instead, there is beginning to be a variety of forms, just as there is in nature. Too many people think that a modern house must have just one form. The real fact is that an American Modern house is a house designed to fit a modern situation. The essence of our time is that, for almost the first time in history, we have the right to be different. This makes possible many ways to live. This again corresponds to the infinite variety of nature, in which we find many kinds of animals, many kinds of rocks, many kinds of trees.

As a result of following these principles, the design of each good building is a unique response to a nique situation—a situation made p by the qualities of the site, the imate, the money at hand, the rpose for which the building is be used, the needs and desires the people for whom it is to be uilt and the ability of the man ho designs it. Just the opposite of is is the belief that a house is a andardized product like Ivory

ap. Like Ivory soap, the standdized house is made up from a rmula. It is made to fit an ideogy, not a people. Like Pro-ustes' bed, it cannot be changed.
the occupant doesn't fit, he must trimmed to size.

UR preference for the materials of nature goes logically with our ve of natural colors. Take wood, r example. In the new interiors see plain wood surfaces which pend for their interest on the ain, color and texture of the wood elf. These surfaces are not em-llished by carving, molding or lays. Attention is not called to e way in which the wood is rked, either by making a pat-n of it, or by drawing attention tool marks. Finishing, too, is ne to enhance the natural quales of the material, instead of scuring them as we used to do.

In the case of California redwood, which has become so popular a building material, no interior finish is needed, even for protection. A quick going-over with sandpaper or steel wool, and the surface is new again even after 40 years.

In any case, whatever we do to materials, or leave undone, is motivated by the desire to let the natural quality of them speak for itself.

The influence of our new attitudes toward orientation is evident. Obviously a breath-taking panorama on one side of the room (the sight of a rainbow forming, or the light fading softer and softer after the sunset, the view of a pond reflecting autumn's gold, red, yellows, and browns, or a winter world, white to the horizon) alters how you design the rest of the room. Such vistas as these provide pretty stiff competition for anything put on the other three walls.

But the truth is that even without glass walls and picture windows, we do not have to depend on wall decoration to get interest into a room. In earlier times, wall decoration was much more important than it is now, for the simple reason that furniture, as we use it, hardly existed at all. People did

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

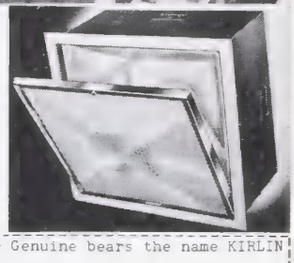
not have as many things to amuse hem as we do now, so they were nore interested in pattern on their walls and floors. The richness of our lives today makes us content with plain, natural surfaces.

The present popularity of nature n decoration and architecture is leeper than the use of nature olors and natural materials. 'or it is accompanied by a swing o the use of realistic form in de- ign, and the use of natural objects hemselves as decoration. The first vidence of this was a sudden em- hasis on big, bold house plants, sed almost architecturally. When laster, chrome, glass, white walls nd abstract decoration became the ashion in the 1930s, the majority f people craved something to re- eve the effect. Where it would ave been unthinkable to introduce floral print, it was allowable to ring in a tree. But since not every- ne has the green thumb, people on thought of something else. till-life arrangements of stones, ark, roots, and branches were ubstituted for plants. Like plants, nese too brought the richness and ariety of natural form and texture nto the room. So was started a ew fashion—to use bold, dramatic, ature forms against simple, mod- rn backgrounds. Each brings out ne best in the other and each gains y being seen with the other.

Along with the insistence on na- ure materials, there is another emand which bears signs of the ame popular origin. It is our grow- ng preference for the house in hich natural behavior is possible —that is, a house which permits us to live in harmony with our real natures, our real needs and desires. For most people, this means informality, comfort, lack of pretense, outdoor living and the enjoyment of natural beauty.



There are several reasons for the development of our American attitude toward nature which plays such an important part in our present tastes. The first is due to the American physical environment for the last 300 years. In the new continent men came into contact with a nature which did not bear the imprint of man, as did nature in Europe. Examples of art, such as painting, sculpture and architecture hardly existed, so people got their ideas of beauty from nature itself. The very virginal character of our geography helped shape our attitudes.

The second reason comes from our social and political inheritance. Even such things as our likes and dislikes in decoration, our ideals of behavior, are the result of Rousseau's philosophical attitude toward the natural world which flourished about 200 years ago, and which, during the formative years of our young republic, was very much in vogue. Rousseau idealized the natural man, whose courage, honor, and independence were the result of his inherent qualities, not of his position in society. We still hold to this idea of the "natural gentleman." Such naturalistic theories about nature molded our national attitudes and shaped our tastes.

Still a third reason has, during later years, brought us to our present tastes. Americans, often looked down upon as being completely standardized, are actually the most individualized human beings in the history of man. A philosophy of life which insisted on the importance of the individual resulted in releasing man's powers which, in turn, produced an economy of abundance which has permitted us to indulge in further individualization. Consequently, as individuals, we are all looking for ways and means by which to proclaim our individual distinctness from others. This causes us to desire The Unique Object, the ownership of which will enhance our individuality and hence our worth in our own eyes and those of others. Since natural objects are, inevitably, one-of-a-kind, they fill the bill equally as well as "old master" paintings or custom clothes or automobiles. Ownership of natural objects, such as a beautiful piece of driftwood (like the one above), which cannot be duplicated, confers on us the distinction which we as individuals crave.

The fourth reason springs out of a kind of social snobbishness. Mos of us now do our work indoors i urban conditions, instead of i rural conditions. Formerly, most o us worked outdoors, and it was mark of social status and of th privileged to be able to stay in doors. The "nut brown maid" go her tan as the result of milkin cows and farm work. So the mar of a lady was a peaches-and-crea complexion. Nowadays, the counte part of the farm worker is the in door worker in office and factory So now it is the lady who acquire the tan. A tan has come to be th mark of wealth and social positio Because it is a symbol of leisur Tan is synonymous with an ou door life—very much a desirabl wanted mark of social status.

STILL another reason for ou growing love of nature lies in i unavailability for most of us. A contact with nature becomes hard to get (as our society becomes mo urbanized), nature becomes mo valuable in our eyes. Thus have w come to prize the indoor-outdo architecture formula and natur colored furnishings.

"Plays from the socks up"

writes Thomas Mann about Artur Rubinstein

"Last winter I sat next to a teen-age youngster who was obviously hearing his first piano recital—one by Artur Rubinstein. 'Boy!' he said in the intermission, 'does he play from the socks up!' And I have a pretty firm conviction that this highly sophisticated man-of-the-old-world would be pleased to hear the kid's verdict. For whether it's Beethoven, Chopin or Villa-Lobos, Rubinstein plays with the complete gusto of a man whose work is his greatest joy."—Thomas Mann.

THESE THINGS I LOVE ABOUT THE UPSTAIRS IN THE MORNING

This Lam Lite-Table is so perfect for television, you'd think it was meant just for that. Fact is, it was designed to serve conversation groups. An indoor campfire, so to speak. It's perfect, too, as an end table or night light. The parchment-like aproned top is fibre-glass-reinforced plastic, rugged and strong as all-get-out. With 14″ or 15½″ birch or walnut legs, $12.95; brass (14″ only), $14.95. Bloomingdale's, New York, N. Y.

Self-renewing, all-purpose sandpaper! This cellular, synthetic-mineral block amounts to just that. Sand-No-Mor sheds its abrasive surface, eraser-fashion, as it dulls all during use. What's more, it adjusts its abrasive bite to the need at hand, and leaves the surface smooth and unscarred. It's a wonder to remove rust or caked grease from metal, to feather plaster edges. 4 for $1.40. Carter Co., Box 1924, Columbus, Ohio.

The speed with which this rotating Bell Professional Yarn Winder polishes off a skein is no small feat. But we were even more impressed by the unstretched, airy ball it yields; crisscrossed just like bought ones for proper unreeling slack. Peg-in fingers adjust yarn holder to any size or weight of skein. The metal winder weighs only two pounds, suctions to any flat area. $2.98. Artisan Galleries, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

You can refinish the stripped floor or furniture without further ado. It can be used on linoleum, too. ½ gal., $2.39. 1-gal. $3.95. Carson's, Chicago, Illinois.

Window with a college education: The International Safety Window looks and works just like an ordinary double-hung wood window; its two sashes slide fully up and down. But there's also an extra trick—each sash can also tilt inward. Thus you can safely clean the outside from the inside, and no fiddling with screens or storm sash. You can have no-draft, rain-free ventilation as you wish—or 100% window opening for utmost air on a steaming night. The window can be open without danger of the baby falling out.

The double action is simple enough: Each sash is hinged at the bottom corners to metal slides, which move up and down in the stainless steel tracks of the window frame. Spring-backed, the tracks hold each sash open or closed—without pulleys, cords, weights, balances.

Ready-to-install package includes weather stripping and all parts, with-or-without muntin bars. Price is comparable to other high-quality wood windows. Screens and storm sash are extra. International Safety Window Corp., 121-27 30th St., Brooklyn 32, New York.

For water misers. Even if you don't live in an area where you must save water, you will be interested in Narospray Shower Head. This neat little attachment is adjustable from a fine to a regular soaking spray. Its narrow stream prevents direct flow of water on walls or shower curtain. Anyone can remove the old showerhead and screw on Narospray—it fits any standard ½" pipe outlet. The manufacturer claims it saves 50% of the usual shower water and fuel to heat it. The showerhead, made of brass with nickel-chromium plating, costs about $4.50. Narospray Corp., 2440 N. Hamlin Ave., Chicago 47, Ill.

Lock for a lifetime. One of the new key-in-the-knob locks which is especially easy to install is warranted for a lifetime of use by the maker. The heart of the Dexter tubular lock (a 5-pin tumbler cylinder) is encased in steel. Over this is a heavy layer of brass with a jeweler's finish. The knob is attached permanently to the rose and the two roses are joined with tie bolts—there are no set screws to work loose. It will fit either left- or right-hand doors and can be purchased from hardware stores for about $9.00. National Brass Co., Grand Rapids 2. Michigan.

Odorless paint. Allergic to paint smell? Well, now you can paint a room and occupy it the same day. Keystone paints—flat, gloss, and semi-gloss finishes—are odorless. They do not smell in the can, while being applied or while drying. This is achieved by a new formula for the paint and not by a perfume or deodorant. The paint can be purchased from Keystone dealers throughout the U.S. for approximately $3.75 to $4.75 per gallon and is available in quarts, gallons, and 5-gallon sizes. Decorator's Diary

Neat compromise for curtaining glass walls in a modern house where the taste for chintz still lingers is one of the new sheer, textured casement cloths with screen-printed designs on them. is one of the new nature patterns—fern leaves in varying shades of green, or blue, or a combination of yellow and brown. Tried it at the Burdens' where it looks as if it were specially dreamed up to go with the rock garden outside. The day we hung the curtains was the first time I saw that wistful, hesitant look disappear from Mrs. Burden's face—the look that always comes when somebody asks her: "Well, how do you like living in a modern house?"

Having satisfied the chintz-hunger with the curtains, it was a cinch convincing Mrs. Burden that Great-grandfather Twining's big wing chair should be re-covered in

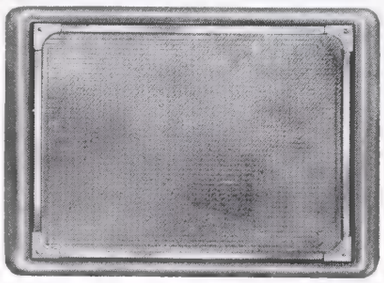
New Healthful Glassheat brings sun's warm rays into your home

• CLEAN • SAFE • ECONOMICAL

Continental Glassheat, the country's newest and most efficient heating system was originally designed to meet the rigid military specifications of the French "Maginot Line." Since then it has been adapted for and installed in homes, hospitals, offices and every type of building throughout the United States and 17 foreign countries.



Continental Glassheat was installed in this Santa Monica, Calif. home with thermostatic controls in each room in less than 48 hours.

...Inexpensive to Install and Operate

As in this lovely ranch house in Santa Monica, California, home owners and architects have found Continental Glassheat to be inexpensive to install, yet cleaner and healthier than any other type of heating system yet devised. Glassheat panels can be wired into your home as easily as your lighting system. It can be operated and controlled like your electric light with a thermostat installed in each room. It can be used to heat your entire house, or as an auxiliary heating unit to warm a cold room.

The humidity range is healthier than with any other type of heat, and its safety features make it ideal for children's rooms. Common colds are unknown with this system.

Greeff's new nubby-textured upholstery fabric by name of "Radcliffe." A far cry from the staid English prints the chair has always been dressed in before. But the finished effect is even more handsome than I predicted. The fabric—with its multicolored cross-threads—taupe, aqua, apricot—on a lemon-yellow warp, has a definite handwoven look which is just as it should be, considering the handcraft construction of that venerable antique. At the same time it puts the antique on speaking terms with the modern house and its glass walls.

Add to the list of comfortable sofas-with-a-light-look: the newest member of the upholstered group at Modern Designs, Inc. You think it's a bit underscaled until you sit down and realize there's room for two more of you—and to spare. One-piece seat and back cushions often account for that illusion of smallness. I've discovered—also fairly high exposed wood legs, and some kind of treatment at the ends to make the arms look less solid. (This one has slightly recessed fabric-covered panels.) Bet it will be just the ticket for the Carsons. Everything else we've tried to set at right angles to their fireplace has taken on a sudden resemblance to a ten-ton truck.

Deceptive sofa

"A document, to be a document," says William Galligan speaking of wallpaper, "must be a reproduction from an original, rather than a mere adaptation from an original." No quarrel with that. But what a surprise you get when you leaf through his collection of pedigreed documents, and up pops a pattern to settle last night's argument about modern art. Take that leaf design. A perfect illustration of what I like to call "abstract realism" (confounds the high-brows no end). The feeling of the leaf is there—the lacey texture, the fluttery lightness. That's realism, isn't it? But if you photographed a leaf

Jellied Date Ring

Cut up 10 ounces of light-colored dates in small pieces, discarding the skin if dry. (Dip the knife in hot water and they will cut more easily.) Soak 2 tablespoons of gelatine in ½ cup of cold water, add 1 cup of boiling water and 2 tablespoons of sugar, and stir until dissolved. Mix in the dates. When cooled, add the grated rind of ½ lemon, 2 tablespoons of lemon juice, ½ cup of orange juice, and 1 cup of sherry. Set in the refrigerator until thick enough to keep the dates from sinking to the bottom of the dish, stirring occasionally. Then turn into a 1-quart ring mold that has been wet with cold water. Chill until firm. Unmold on a round platter, and surround with frozen strawberries. Serve with whipped cream mixed with cooked orange rind.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

by Julie Polshek

I HAVE a thoughtful reader to thank for bringing to my attention one of the finest barbecue sauces I've ever used. My informant said that inasmuch as Daddy Jim's Southern Pit Barbecue Sauce was sold only in the Memphis area (it's now available by mail) that it might not have come to my attention. She was so taken with it, she went on to say, that she thought I would like to try it out and pass the word along. I shared her enthusiasm, and here's the story.

It's a real, honest-to-goodness barbecue sauce, the kind (as the name implies) that they use in the deep South for pit barbecuing. If your outdoor barbecuing activities are at an end for the season, or you're an apartment-dweller deprived of such pleasures, you can put Daddy Jim's sauce through its paces in your kitchen oven with very noteworthy results. The eating preliminaries may lack the fun of outdoor cookery but the palate-delight leaves nothing to be desi Heaven forbid, though, that use this fiery basting concentrat a table condiment, as you can many barbecue sauces on the ket. You'd have to rush for a extinguisher to put out the inte blaze. The spicy sauce is inten solely as a basting medium, an purposely given excessive fire you can modify its hotness vinegar to suit your own pa There seems to be no common nominator for such things. Da Jim's recommendation is two-th sauce to one-third vinegar. degree of dilution is no sissy, lieve me.

The superbly blended sauce refined composite, as it might called, of a number of generati old plantation recipes. It's as thentic as the Negro-Mammy pes from which it stems. couldn't ask for finer. It's heav on spareribs and chicken, as as pork, beef, and lamb roasts.

all too often the case, with potatoes, rice or barley, and no artificial flavoring or coloring is used. But the crux of its homemade taste is that it is completely cooked by the same slow, long-simmered method you would use in your own kitchen, before it goes into the can. These packers are perfectionists. And it certainly tells in the end result, as you'll find when you do your own tasting. You use the minestrone just as it comes out of the can, without dilution. One can contains two hearty servings.

To find a cookbook that is not only a treasure-trove of recipes worthy of special commendation from any gourmet, but also delineated so simply that a novice can use it assuredly, is a red-letter event. The case in point is The Perfect Cook Book for the Perfect Hostess, by Mrs. Mildred Knopf, whose prowess as both a hostess and a cook are well known in Hollywood, where she lives. Between its covers you will find some five-hundred pages of epicurean recipes which she has gathered in her extensive travels here and abroad, from the finest restaurants and home kitchens. It's quickly evident when you browse through the book and try out a few of the recipes that this is no casual or ordinary collection.

It's her contention that anyone who loves good food can, with accurate, step-by-step directions be a good cook. I heartily concur on the fact that a fondness for good food makes an important contribution to a cook's prowess. Having long since left the novice class, I tried the book out on a couple of food-loving brides just learning to spread their wings in the kitchen, to test out Mrs. Knopf's contention that a novice can use these recipes with aplomb. The answer is "yes." I had a number of turns with the book myself; the recipes I tried have a permanent home in my culinary repertoire.

The fascinating book costs $3.50 (plus postage), from Brentano's, 586 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Perhaps, I shouldn't admit publicly that until I became the recipient recently of a package of Farm Home Foods' smoked goose, I had never partaken of it. I had heard rumblings of the fact that such a delicacy existed and that it was held in high favor by many, but somehow I had never sought it out. It may be because goose meat is something which I have alw been able to take or let alone.

Much to my surprise, theref I was very much taken with smoked variety. It was far m delicately flavored than I expec for one thing, and I discove too, that smoke and goosemeat boon companions. I'm sorry that I tarried so long in mak the acquaintance of smoked g —or at least, of the delicious o ing of this farm.

The manner in which they pare the smoked goose for s ment is unique, and a great s ing convenience. The breast n is rolled up like a small cott ham and tied into the goose s which serves as a casing. W this, you get, packed separat the shanks (with legs) of goose that delivered the breast one of his brethren, maybe). any rate, breast and legged sha are the yield of a 13- to 15-po dressed goose. Should you hav mind making one or more of men on your list a gift of smo goose, I might add that it's att tively gift-packed. (All orders delivery by Christmas must be ceived by Farm Home Foods November 15th, because of amount of work entailed in paring and smoking the geese.)

The sweet, tender meat is ga color, with almost the look of uncooked roast of beef, except a far finer texture. It has enough smoke in its make-up enhance the flavor of the meat give it zest, without overpowe the natural meat flavor, as is often the case. Both breast shanks can be roasted if you l but for the most part, the delic is served on dark rye bread crackers, sliced thin as paper an appetizer or midnight sn It's rich as all get-out and goe long way. The sort of thing the menfolks go for in a big and as before indicated, it doe lack for feminine appeal, eithe

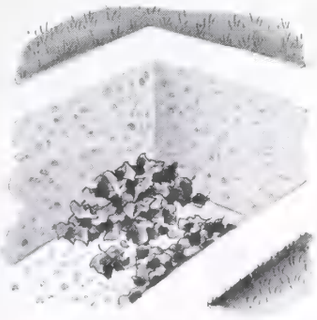
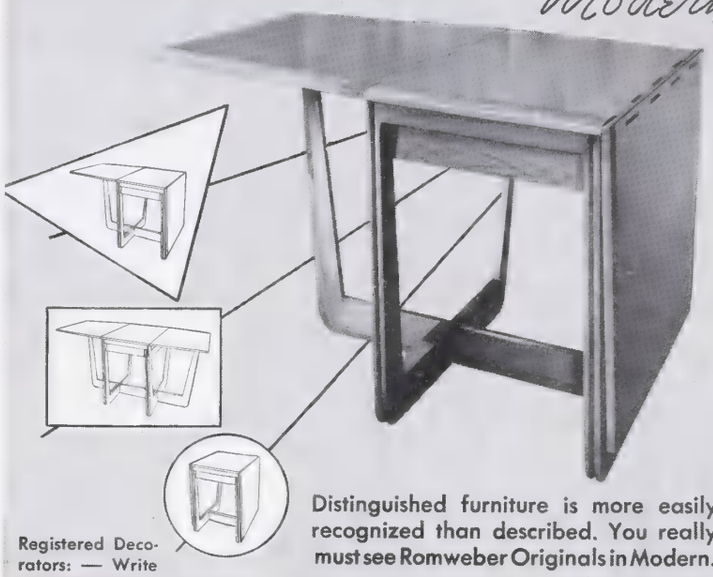
Garden horrors to avoid

Don't leave weeds and dead plants in your borders. They look messy, are an invitation to mice and other pests. They also make a fine winter home for all kinds of unwelcome blights.



Don't leave stakes and plants in the borders either. They give an unkempt look; make more work in the spring.

Don't let leaves stay on your lawn. Leaving them there even a week may injure the grass—longer than a week might kill it. Burn diseased leaves; put pest-free ones in compost pile



SKETCHES BY JOHN BRIMER

Don't let accumulated leaves and trash spend the winter in your garden pool. The pool should be drained immediately if you haven't done it yet.

Don't forget to stake your tall, narrow evergreens. Otherwise, ice and snow will destroy their shape.

Don't put off the job of cleaning all tools to protect them from winter injury. After you clean them, use an oily rag on all metal parts to prevent rust. If you have a power mower, clean the blades, oil rustable parts, drain the tank and gas lines.

Don't neglect to clean leaves from your gutters and install strainers to keep them out of downspouts. An overflow will cause ice to form on plants and shrubs under the gutters and may injure them severely.

Don't leave newly planted trees exposed to winter wind and sun. Stake them securely and water them weekly until the ground freezes.

How to ride upstairs

by G. B. Woodin

If you are not to climb stairs, consider installing vertical transportation of some kind. It may cost you less than a new car

If anyone in your family has been cautioned against climbing the stairs, don't feel you must immediately move to a one-story house. There are two ways to eliminate stair-climbing in your existing house:

You can install a small elevator for approximately the price of a new car.

You can install a one-passenger inclined lift, up one flight of stairs, for little more than half the price of a new car.

Operating costs for either of these items are slight: An elevator, for instance, may cost you a nickel a day for house current.

Your elevator can be located in stairwell, hall, or corner of a room. If you happen to have closets stacked one over another, there's a perfect place. The cab may be "free-standing" (opposite page, top); it may be semi-enclosed (opposite page, center); or completely enclosed in a shaft (below and at the bottom of the opposite page.

In any case, your elevator operate with commendable qu ness. A safety-device stops it mediately at the slightest to from below—if the cat's as underneath, for instance. Anot device prevents you from a dentally opening the gate in n air. You get full automatic cont automatic stopping, operating tons in the cab and on each fl An inclined stairway lift (see p 316) is equally quiet, and the same convenient autom operation, with comparable reg for your safety.

Vertical transportation toda installed mainly for individ who cannot or should not cl stairs. Of course, once a lift put in, everybody uses it. (Se people know instinctively stair-climbing involves up to times the effort of ordinary w ing.) Needless to say, you'll re appreciate your elevator when have heavy trunks or furnitur

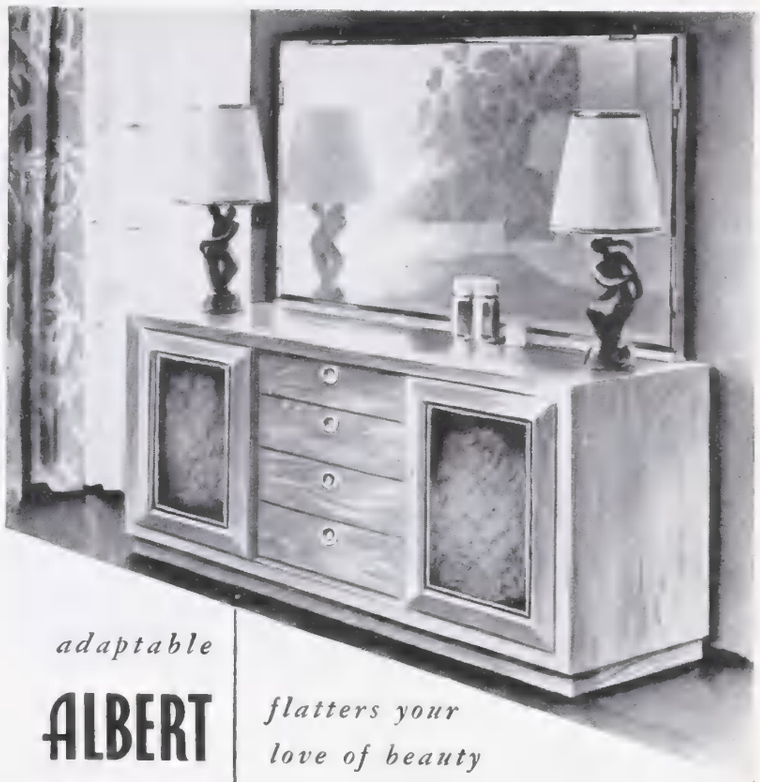
● A modern house can very easily be planned for installation of elevator should it ever become necessary. Right-hand closet here might once have stored children's overcoats. Years later it's part of an elevator shaft. Cab rises to closet overhead. Sedgwick Machine Works.

• A difficult problem was solved here by having two gates on the cab. Downstairs you enter straight ahead. Upstairs, you exit left. Section of balcony rail swings open for you. Safety mechanism won't let you open either gate in mid-air. Inclinator Co. of America.



• Free-standing here on the first floor, this cab disappears in shaft as it rises. On the way down, the cab stops instantly if it touches anything; you couldn't squash even a match box. Note beautiful wood of cab. You can order from many styles and finishes. The Shepard Elevator Company.

• This completely-enclosed installation illustrates how well-hidden an elevator can be, if you want it hidden. Muffling against noise is unnecessary: Power comes from inherently quiet electric motor tucked away in basement or attic. Otis Elevator Company.

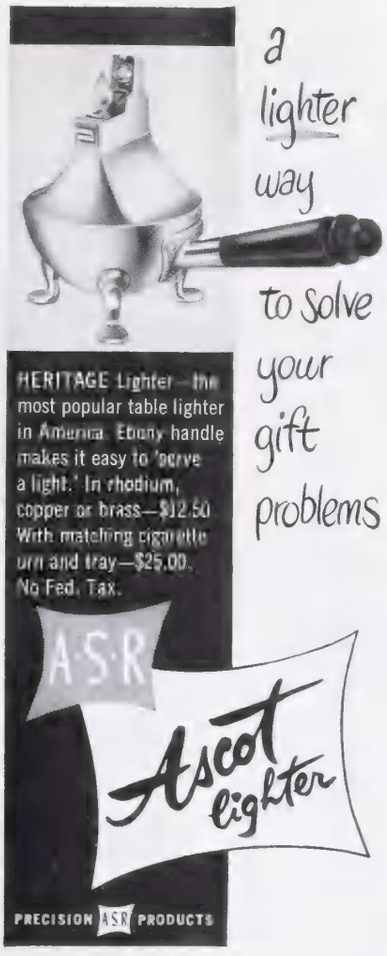
the house is warmer than the r outside, the warm air flows out e top and fresh, cooler air flows through the ground floor win- ws and the open doors. The ller the house, the more effective this chimney arrangement. It rks better with a two-story house n with a single story. Where the tural chimney effect is not strong ough, you help it by putting in attic fan.

Of course, the same chimney ef- ts then also work in winter. ur expensive heat escapes up- rd through all those vents, cold fts come galloping down the irs, and cold air is sucked in ough cracks in doors and win- ws. What to do? In a mild cli- te, say in England, you would ply forget the whole idea. In e tropics you would use an all- imney design. People do. In land you use a strictly non- imney design. But in our Ameri- n climate, that gets both very d and very hot, it's obvious u need a "convertible" house— nvertible from tropical style to land style. The upward chan- ls must be designed to close up winter. Even the staircase— pecially the staircase—should ve a door on it, so it will be a mney in summer, but not a chim- y in winter.

Now you have done just about erything you can do with a sim- box to make it livable. You ve fixed it so that it keeps itself l in summer and, to some extent, ps itself warm in winter. You ve done this, so far, without ma- nery, without special unusual terials. You have done it by pure ign: location, shape, arrange- nt, color. The box is still simply wooden crate. Yet, you could al- st live in it and survive. Cer- nly with a little stove you could in it. And now you are ready to l the three big modern comfort entions: insulation, central heat, conditioning.

f you had rushed in and put se things into your box before u did all this design work, the and the machinery would have n working against each other— air-conditioning machine try- to cool you while a big west dow tries to roast you. Your nace trying to keep you warm, ile ill-designed windows, cold ds, a cold floor chilled you, l so on. You would have got nfort only at great expense and with much complicated doctoring—and perhaps not at all. But now you have a house that's trying to be comfortable, anyway, and needs only a little help.

9. A trick with fluff. Now put in some insulation. It does two things. First, it keeps heat from leaking through the walls and the ceiling and so it saves you fuel. But fuel saving is really important only in wartime, when fuel is hard to get. As my friend, Dr. L. P. Herrington says, "Fuel waste is like sin; everybody is against it in theory, but nobody really cares in practice."



The really important thing is this: Insulation keeps the house from being stuffy, overheated, unhealthily dry.

Here's how that works. Without insulation, the outside cold comes through walls and ceiling so that the inside surfaces of the house are cool. Now, you can just heat a little harder and keep the air in the room as warm as you want it. But that is not the whole story. Heat now jumps from your warm skin directly to the cool walls; you get "radiant cooling." To make up for this heat loss from your body, you have to keep the air in the room extra warm—perhaps 80° F. Otherwise you'll feel chilly. Such overheated air is stuffy, dry, and unhealthy. It is also drafty. An overheated room can never be really comfortable. It makes you hate winter.

With insulation, your walls are much warmer. The "radiant" heat loss from your skin to the wall is much less. You are perfectly comfortable in much cooler air. Perhaps your thermometer reads only 68° F., but still you are warm enough. This cooler air is more pleasant, less stuffy, less dry, much healthier, less drafty.

There is a special insulation problem that goes with big windows. On cold winter nights the big windows will also give you a great deal of radiant cooling; heat jumps directly from your skin to the cold window panes. You feel chilly even though the thermometer shows a room temperature of, say, 75°. The bigger your windows, the more important it is to have heavy draperies that you can draw at night, to put a barrier between yourself and the cold window panes.

10. A trick with fire. Next, heating. You take your pick of heating plants—coal, oil, gas, hot air, hot water, steam, electric, etc. The choice is wide. But there is one Climate Control trick to heating, and you must not miss it: The bigger your south windows, the more quick-acting must your heating plant be. Remember—a big south window has terrific heating power when the low winter sun shines into it. But it also has great cooling power, in cold weather, the moment the sun goes behind a cloud. So your heat must come on with a bang the moment the sun goes off, or you'll be cold. Your heat must go off with a bang the moment the sun comes out, or you'll be hot. And besides, you'll be wasting fuel money. We said earlier that a big south window can actually save you heating money. It can, but only if the heating plant is quick-responding and clicks right along. This exact, quick control of heat was not important so long as people were content to live in darkish houses with small windows. But with big windows, it's crucial.

11. A trick with water. Finally, air conditioning. It is still quite expensive to air-conditon a whole house. But that's where your underground room comes in. It is not expensive to air-condition a room that's trying to be cool anyway. Air-conditioning a sunken room is something you can afford. At the same time, air conditioning takes care of that dank, musty cellar smell that the sunken room might have. That smell comes from a fungus. The fungus grows in dampness. The dampness forms when moist, warm summer air touches the cool walls of an underground room. But an air-conditioning machine squeezes a lot of water out of the air before it blows into the room. So an underground room filled with conditioned air develops no dampness and has no smell. The air-conditioning machine needs a sunken room, and the sunken room needs an air-conditioning machine.

12. A trick with money. Here is a powerful way to take the bite out of the weather: Make your house big. The bigger the box, the slower it is to heat up in the daytime, the slower to cool off at night. This is because the big box contains more air, in proportion to the outside "skin" exposed to the weather, than the small box does. Take a box and double its length, width, and height, and it will then have four times as much outside wall, but it will contain eight times as much air. That air (and the bigger mass of material, too) is a steadying influence. That's why cathedrals and railroad stations and other very large buildings are cool in summer and not cold in winter; and why the bigger house, other things being equal, is more comfortable.

But this is a very, very expensive way to get comfort. And the whole trend in house design is against it. Houses are getting smaller; they are better equipped, more convenient, better planned. They are full of expensive labor-saving machinery. But they are smaller than they used to be.

It's as it should be. But it gives you something to think about. The mathematics of the box also works the other way round. As the box gets smaller, the people inside it feel the weather more quickly and more sharply. The house of 1900 could be comfortable—maybe—with only the fuzziest idea of Climate Condition in its design because it was big. The house of 1950, because it is small, is viciously uncomfortable if it has poor Climate Control. Just because you really can't use trick No. 12, it's all the more important that you don't miss any of the other tricks.

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS

North: Spring-planted chard is still good, in fact it's at its best in cool weather.

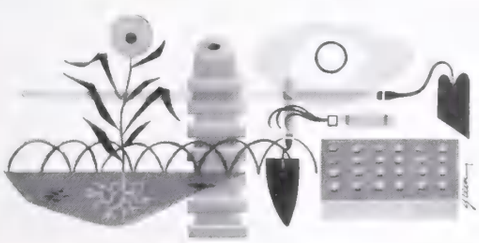
Protect the exposed upper part of beet and carrot roots by pulling soil to them with a rake or hoe. Dig and store only when continuous sub-freezing temperatures are predicted.

Middle South and Pacific Coast: You'll seldom go wrong with another seeding of spinach or turnips in mid-November.

Plant rye grass now over your Bermuda grass lawn. Fertilize before seeding to insure rapid growth and a good winter lawn.

Lower South: Plant onion seed. Use an adapted southern variety such as Grano or Bermuda. If you prefer not to seed directly in the garden you can start in flats and transplant later.

Squirrels love pecans. If you have many of these animals around your place you'd better pick up your pecans frequently.



Tropics including Southern Florida: In frost-free areas Acorn or Table Queen squash grow well in winter. They give variety to late winter meals.

Spray your newly set tomato plants to control leaf-blight if you have damp weather.

Parsnips with roast pork. We are very fond of parsnips cooked with roast pork. Peel, slice lengthwise and place in the roaster an hour or so before the meat is done. By late November parsnips should have had enough cold to develop their sweetness. If in doubt, store for a week in the hydrator of your refrigerator before using.

Two types of onions. Sweet Spanish onions, those big fellows you find on the market these days, are fine for french frying or for using raw in hamburgers or salads. But don't overlook the virtues of ordinary yellow-globe onions for culinary purposes. Their greater pungency imparts real flavor to a roast. They are definitely superior for creamed onions. We often raise both types and use each for its own purpose.

Cabbage storage. Garden books, old and new, show cabbage stored upside down. Some good results that I had without making my cabbage resort to acrobatics prompted me to make some tests of various methods. Now I'm convinced that the upside down cabbage is the victim of an ancient garden superstition. For longest storage cabbage needs: (a) Cool atmosphere, the cooler (down to the freezing point) the better. (b) Roots in a moist medium, soil or peat. The roots will continue to send moisture to the leaves and the head will remain in good condition.

Two good storage methods: 1. Pull the whole plant when there is danger of severe freezing. Reset plants close together in a shallow trench with heads about level with the ground. Leave exposed in mild weather, cover with leaves or straw when severe freezing is predicted. 2. Pull whole plants. Place in crates or boxes with roots down and covered with a little moist peat or soil. Leave outdoors in a shaded place during mild weather. Give leaf or straw protection when it gets colder, then move to the root cellar when continued subfreezing weather is predicted. Keep roots moist by occasional watering. This method is my choice for the North.

Incidentally, these same storage methods are good for celery.

Greenhouse tomatoes. Can I raise tomatoes in my home greenhouse? Dozens of people asked me that question when I was on the Horticulture staff at Michigan State College. The answer is yes if you adapt your planting schedule to the temperature at which you carry your greenhouse.

For a cool house: Plant seeds about the first of the year. Pot the seedlings. When the plants are quite husky set in a ground bed or bench. Rate of growth will depend on temperature, but you should have ripe fruit two months ahead of an outdoor crop.

A seeding in early July will give you a fall crop that will extend up to the holidays.

For a warm house: Where day temperatures are kept above 70 degrees, plant seeds in November. Set in four-inch pots and if space is not yet available when they begin to crowd, shift to sixes. Set out in a bed or bench when flowering begins. You can frequently start picking in late March or April.

For the fall crop in a warm house, seed in early July and set as soon as the space is ready. This fall crop can be carried much later into the winter than the crop kept in a cool house.

Four pointers on raising greenhouse tomatoes.

1. Spacing—Four square feet per plant is good.
2. Training and pruning—Prune to a single stem and train on string.
3. Yield—Ten pounds per plant is not uncommon for the spring crop; half that is good for fall tomatoes.
4. Pollination—Shake the plants vigorously every two or three days to insure pollination.

Persimmon time. My first bout with a persimmon was probably typical of the introduction most Northerners have to this fruit. Its extreme astringency led me to believe that folks who rave about persimmons must have perverted tastes. Later, while living in the South, I learned that our Negro cook's saying, "a persimmon's only fit to eat fer five minutes 'fore it's rotten," is just about true. Persimmons are picked when quite firm. They must ripen for some time and become quite soft before they are edible.

If you live south of approximately 32 degrees latitude look into the Japanese persimmon varieties for your fruit garden. Further north they may not be hardy. But you will find these large orange-colored persimmons at better fruit markets, so be sure to try a few. While being held for ripening they make an attractive fruit bowl display, alone, or with apples, grapes or pears.

Celery for turkey dressing. I rate my Del's turkey dressing as top and last year when I was drafted into kitchen service on Thanksgiving Eve, I learned why. She puts plenty of celery, coarsely cut and browned, with chopped onions before mixing with the bread and other ingredients. Three cups of celery goes into the dressing for a 15 to 20 pound bird.

Peerage

Look for the famous "Peerage" trademark. This imported English brass has an exclusive hand rubbed finish which is lacquered to prevent tarnish and requires no cleaning.

To enhance town, country or suburban interiors — these hanging wall placques portray the "Capitol Building" and the "Governor's Palace" in Williamsburg, Virginia. An exclusive process reproduces these scenes in full color on metal and they are strikingly framed in "Peerage" Brass. 12" diameter, approximately $5.00 each.

carry from one floor to another.

But what if you're planning a new house anyway? If someone in your family may not climb stairs, a one-story house is probably the best answer to the problem. And there are many other advantages in having everything on one level (even though you can enclose more raw space, per dollar spent, in a multi-story box that has less foundation, exterior wall, roof, etc.)

Yet there are cases where you would logically build more than one floor, and hence might well consider vertical transportation in the basic design. For instance: A steeply-sloping lot usually dictates a series of two or more floor levels; and if you have a tiny lot in a densely-populated area, there's only one direction you can build, and that is up.

So, whether or not you need ver tical transportation, keep it i mind even when you start to plan new house. It may work out per fectly well to locate closets on over the other, for a possible futur elevator. And you should probabl have a straight stairway anyhov (for everyday safety). This wil make future installation of an in clined stair-lift very simple (se page 316).

There's one other device tha might save you a lot of work, ever if you can run up and down stair like a mountain goat: a dumb waiter, either manual or electrical ly-powered. This will cost you any where from about $300 on up t $1800 or so. If you own or plan t own a multi-story house, the in stallation of a dumb-waiter is wel worth your consideration.

The American Style in Christmas in Glass

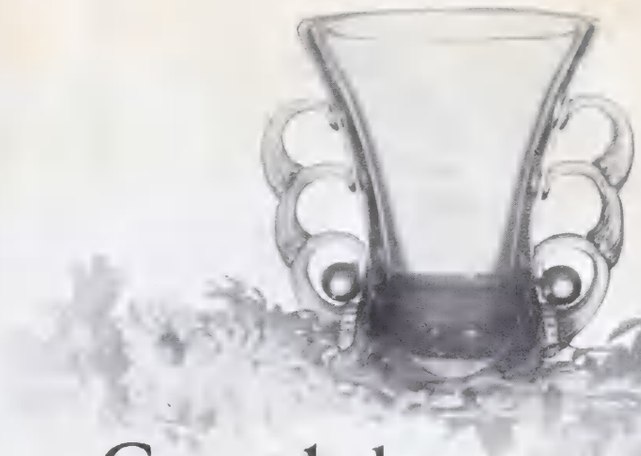
RISE STEVENS, brilliant star of the Metropolitan Opera and RCA Victor records, puts a finishing touch on a supper table setting of Val St. Lambert crystal.

MONUMENTAL cut-crystal inkstand ideal for desks, both home and office; crystal urn makes cigarettes accessible; nine by nine ashtray, clear and massive, often used by hostesses as centerpiece for flowers.



AQUARIUM BOWL can be used with live fish in water or as flower vase. Surrounding crystal candlestick holders also serve double purpose when holding small flowers in water.

VAL ST. LAMBERT, INC.

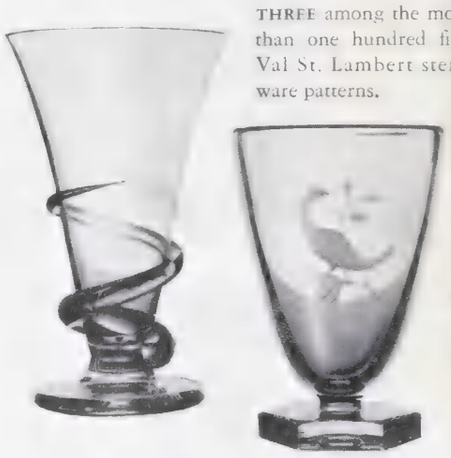
Nine East 55th Street, New York 22, N. Y.

IN CANADA:

Crystal that sings for your Supper

Many Americans who have been in Belgium will recall the shadowy walls of the thirteenth century monastery which have for the past 125 years sheltered magic skills of Cristalleries du Val Saint Lambert — skills inherited from the old Venetian blowers. Masterful interpretations of this art manifest themselves in the purest lead crystal—the fundamental difference between glass and crystal being the latter's heavy lead content.

Clarity, exceptional light refraction, and musicality are but a few of the attributes of this highly skilled craft. There is no machine process that can obtain such beauty and finish. But with all its gem-like qualities, Val Saint Lambert crystal is utterly practical and sturdy.



This century-old firm has been blessed with many outstanding designers. One of the greatest of these is Charles Graffart, who recently visited this country and is rapidly becoming famous here for his original and versatile modern interpretations.

Shown here are but a few of the thousands of articles which are entirely executed by hand and available at finer department, specialty and jewelry stores. Names gladly given on request.

FOR A BRIEF TIME ONLY, YOU MAY NOW OBTAIN

BEAUTIFUL, beautiful BOOKS

LIKE THESE – AT THE SAME PRICE

AS AN ORDINARY NOVEL!

Yes, for a brief time only you may now obtain a Trial Membership in The Heritage Club and thus acquire a collection of the world's classics especially illustrated by the greatest artists and beautifully printed on papers of fine quality

WHEN WE LAY stress upon the fact that this offer can be made for a brief time only," there are unmanly tears on our cheeks.

For we would like to be able to offer Trial Memberships to all comers at all times. We would like to be able to expand the membership of The Heritage Club, and expand it, and expand it.

But there is already a scarcity of paper in this country: paper pulp, too, has gone to war. Of the high quality of paper which we use, the supply is so limited as to force us to gnash our teeth in agony. We have been promised just enough additional paper to enable us to take in just one thousand new members at this time. And that is all we can take in—which is why we shed these tears.

IF YOU OBTAIN one of these Trial Memberships, you will obtain a series of beautiful, beautiful books—at the same price as an ordinary novel. For The Heritage Club distributes to its members "the classics which are our heritage from the past, in editions which will be the heritage of the future." These books are not falsely "de luxe," nor are they old editions dressed up for a new market. They are especially designed by the most famous typographers, illustrated by the greatest of the world's artists, carefully printed by leading printers on fine papers chemically tested to assure a life of at least two centuries, handsomely bound and placed in protective slipcases.

And the members obtain these books for the same price which they are called upon to pay for ordinary novels! Despite increases, general throughout the book business, of 100% in the costs of manufacture, each member is called upon to pay only $3.65 for each book—or only $3.28 if he makes payment in advance!

BUT JUST one thousand Trial Members will be enrolled. If you apply for one of these Trial Memberships (and in time to get one of them!), you will obtain books like these:

Tolstoy's War and Peace, with illustrations by Vasily Verestchagin and Fritz Eichenberg; The Pilgrim's Progress by John Bunyan, with the water-colors of William Blake; Great Expectations by Charles Dickens, illustrated with lithographs in color by the English painter Ardizzone; and The House of the Seven Gables illustrated by Valenti Angelo; and The Way of All Flesh . . .

Yet, if it should happen that you do not desire to have any of these books, you are given a list of two dozen Heritage books from which you may select substitution titles.

Never in the history of book publishing has a greater bargain been offered to wise buyers of books. The Trial Membership gives you an opportunity to put this statement to the test. Please fill out the coupon printed herewith and mail it to The Heritage Club promptly.

GET BEAUTY, COMFORT AND PROTECTION WITH ECONOMY IN A CONCRETE HOUSE

Beauty Concrete imparts beauty, character and charm to any house because concrete masonry units can be laid in a wide variety of pleasing and distinctive patterns. The walls can be left in their original soft gray tones or painted any color with durable portland cement paint. Or, if you prefer, they can be stuccoed in one of many beautiful textures with long-lasting portland cement stucco.

Comfort A concrete house provides year-around comfort in any climate. In northern states and Canada all houses need insulation; a concrete house is easy to insulate. You can count on a concrete house being warm in winter and cool in summer. And inasmuch as it is weathertight, your concrete house will stay clean and dry in all seasons.

Protection A house with concrete walls, concrete subfloors and a firesafe roof provides the maximum firesafety. Concrete can't burn! Sturdy concrete also will stand stanch against such destructive forces as storms, termites and decay.

HOW TO GET A CONCRETE HOUSE

. . . and what will it cost?

Visit or call your local concrete masonry manufacturer for names of architects and builders experienced in concrete house design and construction. Have the architect of your choice show you how to build your house economically with concrete walls, concrete subfloors and a firesafe roof. For more information write us for "Why People Like Concrete Homes." Free but distributed only in U. S. and Canada.

Architect-Designed Houses Stay Young Longer

Economy A concrete house gives you more for your dollar. First cost is moderate compared with other quality construction. It lasts longer, requires less upkeep and needs fewer repairs. These factors add up to your assurance of a lifetime of dependable, low-annual-cost shelter.

Mrs. Dorothy Damar 22 Treat Place, Newark 2, New Jersey

Dear Cornelia: You are so forehanded, especially with Christmas plans and shopping, I cannot resist telling you that this year I am as ready as you. But over and above this self-congratulation, I wish to acknowledge how you helped me solve my gift problem.

You will remember the lovely Crane's Paper you gave me last Christmas. I know you do, for you have had more than the usual number of letters from me, because of it. Well, I thought, if that is what happens to you in giving Crane's, maybe it might happen to me. So I have made my selections, while the selecting was good, and time was on my side for the die-stamping of some of the paper and the engraving of our Christmas cards. I had quite a field day and I am sure the parcel man thought I had bought out the department when he delivered the carton.

It is too early to send you a Christmas message. That will come in good time. Edgar sends his love and thanks you for helping to rescue him from the crush of Christmas.

Affectionately

Marjorie

For all you would remember well and be well remembered for your good taste and thoughtfulness . . . there is no gift more appreciated than Crane's Fine Papers. The choicest materials—cotton and linen fibres—the skill and craftsmanship of nearly 150 years of paper making, is revealed in every sheet of Crane's, in every paper made by Crane. No other papers afford so much pride and pleasure in their use or serve so many important purposes with such distinction.

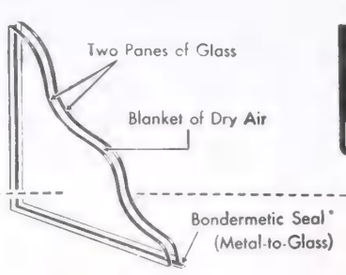
½ inch ADDS feet TO A ROOM



Where building budgets restrict floor space, *Thermopane insulating glass in the windows becomes doubly important. All of the room is usable because the inner pane stays warmer in winter and downdrafts are minimized.

Areas next to windows stay comfortable and furniture can be placed for maximum convenience. An unused "low-comfort zone" is expensive to build. A window wall of Thermopane to give the feeling of spaciousness and to allow full use of the room is the economical solution.

The ½-inch insulating blanket of dehydrated air sealed between the panes of Thermopane does the trick. Builders now are erecting Thermopane window walls at little or no advance in cost over conventional wall construction. For design flexibility and building economy, Thermopane is made in over 80 standard sizes. For details, write for our Thermopane book.

Your Key to Holiday Hospitality

In Kentucky, where a man is judged by the whiskey he keeps, OLD FITZ is first for sending . . . first for serving. Like our whiskey, our egg nog is a family affair — an old fashioned recipe bringing you all the traditional flavor of our slow-distilled oak-ripened sour mash bourbon. Try it? Here's how!

Egg nog for 12 — Stir 12 egg yolks with 12 tablespoons sugar until smooth. Slowly stir in 1 pint Old Fitz, 1 pint *un*whipped double cream. Fold in stiffly beaten whites of 12 eggs: stir in additional pint Old Fitz: Chill until serving. Then fold in 1 pint whipped double cream — sprinkle with cinnamon or nutmeg — and dip in!

records for CHRISTMAS

by Richard Williams

To give you a reasonably useful guide through the melodious heap of new recordings, I have set up categories—somewhat arbitrary ones—which sort the musical preferences of your friends. Give them records of the kind of music in which they are most interested. But before you buy any records as gifts, you had better find out whether the recipient has a turntable for the new 45 records or for the 33⅓ long-playing records (or, as is true in many instruments, for both), or whether he still sticks with the old 78. Most lovers of serious music have given up 78 rpm records, and quite understandably so, since the new speed recordings have a truer and richer sound. [Letter after each recording indicates: (C) Columbia, (V) Victor.]

Lovers of symphony

This is the safest category, for the symphonic repertoire is the one that has the widest audience.

Tchaikovsky: "Pathétique" Symphony, Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, Herbert Von Karajan, conductor (C). An exceptionally interesting performance by the new Viennese conductor of whom the musical world is talking.

Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York, Bruno Walter, conductor (C). The most popular symphony.

Beethoven: Symphony No. 7, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor (V).

Tchaikovsky: Manfred, NBC Symphony Orchestra, Arturo Toscanini, conductor (V). A little-known symphonic poem; to me, one of Tchaikovsky's most beautiful compositions.

Beethoven: "Eroica" Symphony, NBC Symphony Orchestra, Arturo Toscanini, conductor (V). A superb and thrilling performance.

People who have only recently become friends with music

You may have a friend who has recently become curious about "good music," but is as yet somewhat hesitant about tackling an entire symphony or a long piano concerto. Such a one may welcome one of the albums which present excerpts from symphonies or concertos. These are really albums of quotations; as an introduction to music, as a means of arousing curiosity, they serve a good purpose. The new albums are Symphony in Brief, Charles O'Connell conducting the Columbia Symphony Orchestra; and a series by Victor, The Heart of the Ballet, Stokowski conducting; The Heart of the Piano Concerto with Arthur Fiedler and J. M. Sanroma; and The Heart of the Violin Concerto with Erich Leinsdorf and Mischa Mischakoff.

Lovers of piano music

Beethoven: Concerto No. 1, Walter Gieseking, piano, with an anonymous orchestra (C). The great German pianist.

Beethoven: Concerto No. 3,

Claudio Arrau, piano, The Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor (C). Exceptionally good, both soloist and orchestra.

Great Masters of the Keyboard: Debussy, Grieg, Richard Strauss, De Falla, Paderewski, Saint-Saëns, de Pachmann, and others (C). A transfer of old piano rolls to records. A historical curiosity.

Khatchaturian: Concerto, Oscar Levant, piano, New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor (C).

Gershwin: Rhapsody in Blue, Amparo and Jose Iturbi, duo-pianists, RCA Victor Symphony Orchestra, Jose Iturbi, conductor (V). A two-piano version, vivid and exciting.

Bach: The Well-Tempered Clavier (Volume 2), Wanda Landowska, harpsichord (V). A superb album.

Beethoven: Concerto No. 4, Artur Rubinstein, piano, royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Sir Thomas Beecham, conductor (V). Rubinstein's finest new recording. Anybody should respond to this music.

Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Arthur Whittemore and Jack Lowe, duo-pianists (V).

Bach: Sonata No. 5 for Violin Unaccompanied, Joseph Szigeti, violin.

Bach: Concerto No. 1, Joseph Szigeti, violin, orchestra of the New Friends of Music, Fritz Stiedry, conductor (C).

Mendelssohn: Concerto in E Minor, Jascha Heifetz, violin, Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Sir Thomas Beecham, conductor (V).

Violin Favorites: Nathan Milstein, Victor, RCA Victor Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor (V). A good popular album.

Bach: Motets and Chorales, Schola Cantorum, Hugh Ross, director (C).

Ravel: Scheherazade, Jennie Tourel, mezzo-soprano, Columbia Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein, conductor.

Schubert: Songs for Male Chorus, RCA Victor Chorale of Men's Voices, Robert Shaw, conductor.

Lovers of opera

Ljuba Welitch in Two Scene from Don Giovanni (C). The sensational star of the Met.

Great Baritone Arias from Italian Operas: Frank Guarrera, Faust Cleva, conductor (C). A young American, an excellent artist.

Among the recordings of complete operas Puccini's Gianni Schicchi, a one-act humorous opera which is truly humorous; Puccini's Il Tabarro ("The Cloak"), a one-act shocker of lesser worth but nonetheless interesting; and a remarkably good recording of Verdi's masterpiece, Falstaff, an opera especially adapted for home listening because it must be heard often to disclose all its charm. (All these are Cetra importations.) Columbia has imported a complete Tales of Hoffman, recorded by the Paris Opera-Comique, and Victor has made domestically a complete Rigoletto with an excellent cast. Strange that so popular an opera should have been so long unavailable. Here it is, and it makes as generous a Christmas gift as an opera lover would want.

Heart of the Ballet, Leopold Stokowski and his Symphony Orchestra (V).

Ballet Music from Giselle, Royal Opera Orchestra, Covent Garden, Robert Irving, conductor (V).

Chamber music enthusiasts

Schubert: A Major Quintet Piano and Budapest String Quartet (C). This is called the "Trout" Quartet, as Schubert here uses the melody from his song "The Trout." It is a delightful work.

Beethoven: Quartet No. 16 in F and No. 5 in A. The Paganini

Pantry Shelf News

THE holiday season wouldn't be complete without plum pudding. (Perennially, we wonder why this delicious dessert is forced, by tradition or whatever, to hibernate the rest of the year.) But, as you perhaps surmise, I place the subject on the aggenda because I want to propose a very special candidate.

It's a product of Guernsey House, whose fine Rum Bites and fruit cakes you may know. The rich, deliciously flavored pudding is bountifully fortified with fine-quality suet, an important asset to any plum pudding. The old English recipe from which it's made has been a proud possession of the maker's family for generations. Starting with a superior recipe is, of course, all important, as is the skill with which it's carried through. But, in addition, the fastidious attention Guernsey House gives to the quality of each ingredient and to every detail that contributes to the pudding's homemade flavor and all-round perfection matters greatly, too. For instance, making it in very small batches and hand-picking the raisins, if you please. As Miss Mauger puts it, "We make each pudding just as we would if we were going to serve it on our own table."

It was my receipt of one of the puddings as a Christmas gift last year that brought it to my attention. When I recently called in one from this year's batch to refresh my memory before passing the good word along, it seemed to ha a subtle sort of sparkle over ar above its delectable forerunne that made the flavor of the ingr dients sing out without detracti from the superb blending. Tl difference, I discovered on maki inquiry, was the addition of flav sharpening, caramelized-sugar co centrate, Zest Morestin, about whi I told you a while ago.

The packaging of the delectab pudding is noteworthy also, shou its gift angle be pertinent. The on pound pudding rests in a gay, ove proof bowl, tied over wi cheesecloth for easy heating. A aluminum foil doily goes over th then pleated cellophane, sparkli ribbon and a cherry cluster, a finally, a silvery box. It costs $2.4 from Charles & Co., 340 Madis Ave., New York, N. Y.

Before a Smokehouse Ham actu ly arrived at my doorstep, I h received plenty of advance noti from a long list of "rave quotes which preceded it, that this was ordinary vintage of ham. T sampling that followed its arriv proved to the delighted palates all concerned that this ham truly in a class by itself.

Though I was prepared for exceptional goodness, I didn't re ize how really different it is fr other hams. You have to do yo own sampling to understand. rare treat is in store for you. T meat is a dark red. Though it's the salty side, it's infinitely mo ellow in flavor than the usual am, yet, paradoxically, more ungent—if that makes sense. Many people compare it to prociutto; one of my sampling squad aid it tasted like turkey. See what mean? But what really matters s that it is as delectable as it is ifferent. The meat is moist as an be, fine textured, and so tender ou can cut it with a fork. It's so ich that even a he-man appetite an't take this meat in its stride s one would other ham.

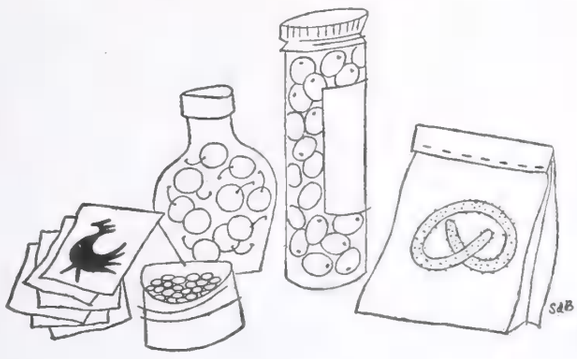
Matter of fact, it's not meant be served or eaten in main-ourse-size portions. This is ham to lice paper-thin and serve in small ortions, whether you use it as a ocktail snack (terrific on tiny uttered biscuits), broiled in cream ravy for Sunday-night supper, ghtly fried to accompany eggs, r however you use it. Grind loose r unsliceable tidbits and put them ito a closed glass jar for omelets, asseroles, etc. The ham stays esh and moist for weeks in the efrigerator—and so delicious!

A nutshell summary of how the am is cooked and cured will help ou understand why it's so differ-nt. And it's interesting to know omething about the background f unusual foods. The Old-South am is prepared by a recipe that as been in the maker's family nce 1730—that's as far back as e's traced it, and it is famed all rough the region. The curing is one in the same back-yard smoke-ouse that has been in service nce the Civil War. The cooking almost a ritual, painstakingly tended every step of the way. fter that, it's slowly baked in a ick coat of yeast dough. But hat contributes most of its dis-nctive flavor and texture is, first all, that no sugar, molasses, ices, or other flavoring are used ther in the cooking or the curing. st the natural goodness of the eat itself. And second, the baked ams are placed in underground ts and left there for two years. hat's almost the most important the many factors that make it indescribably wonderful.



These cooked, ready-to-serve hams average about 8 pounds each. The cost is $2 per pound unboned and $2.25 boned (plus postage). The extra cost of the boned ham is more than worth while in my estimation, especially for a buffet party. It's far easier to cope with, and there's almost no waste in the slicing. From Mary Watkins McLaughlin, Halifax, Virginia.

Last Christmas, lucky me, I found under the Christmas tree a basket of the most luscious grapefruit I've ever eaten—all juice, meat almost as dark as rubies, and sweet enough to eat without sugar. Grapefruit of such special excellence should be talked about, said I to myself, and promptly took steps to get all the necessary details.

They hail from the Rio Grande Valley in Texas, an irrigated oasis where they say a shoestring would grow if you planted it. There's quite a history about how a grower from that area bought some pink-grapefruit trees in Florida, one of which yielded a red-meat grapefruit. It took quite some doing to discover which tree limb produced it, but eventually he ran the matter down, did some grafting, and now all who will can partake of the luscious meat of these ruby-blush grapefruits. They're little known beyond the borders of Texas, but I hope that will soon be rectified. They're too good to keep within such close bounds.

They're not supersize, but it seems they keep them average-size deliberately so the skin of the fruit won't get thick. The big story about them is their delicious flavor, natural sweetness, and the important fact that every grapefruit in every shipment is ruby-blush. Not a white or pink among them.

The grapefruit costs $7.50 for a case of 24, including express charges. They're also available gift-packed in a lovely Mexican basket, containing approximately 20 grapefruit, and festively decked with Christmas decorations for $9.25, (no c.o.d.'s). Simon David, 4311 Oak Lawn Ave., Dallas, Texas.

The Christmas I'll always remember

Christmas has always been a happy time for me.

But I'll never, never forget last Christmas—because it brought a very special dream to life.

I came home late Christmas eve from shopping. The house was dark and quiet. I snapped on the light. There—fitting into the room as if it had been built for it—was a new Hammond Organ!

I approached it slowly, ran my fingers over the keys. Suddenly I found myself playing. And even my unpracticed fingers couldn't spoil the beauty of this music. All the voices of an orchestra were mine to command!

It was an amateur's performance, but it was the most beautiful music that I had ever created.

I must have played for at least an hour. Then I heard a familiar chuckle and I looked around. There were the plotters—my husband and Janey.

"Merry Christmas, Mother!" they chorused. "Are we ever proud of you!" Janey laughed.

"You've been wanting to play music like that long enough," John smiled at me. "How about teaching me to play the Hammond Organ, too?"

The Hammond Organ is the world's most widely-used organ in homes and churches. You can learn to play the Hammond Organ in less than a month. No installation needed. Never needs tuning†. • A gallery of decorative Christmas cards is a permanent fixture in the apartment of Mrs. Arthur Semmler, New York. Each year Mrs. Semmler sends her friends one of Dorothy Simmons's madonnas. Each year she makes a point of saving one which she hangs with those of former years in simple black and gold-leaf frames to enjoy the year round.

• The cards shown left and below are from Dorothy Simmons's latest assortment which includes subjects other than madonnas, but all have a characteristic pastel-like quality of color and design. A card worth sending is worth framing.

• You can find a variety of cards of art-gallery caliber by artists known and unknown. A permanent collection of Grandma Moses, Lucille Corcos, or Currier & Ives would express the Christmas spirit and later look well in a favorite corner.

New Orleans, one of the most romantic of America's cities, is the place to go if you want to see some of the country's handsomest ironwork in its native habitat—and, of course, the famous streetcar.

How to leave home and like it

by Louisa M. Comstock

Dates and rates are changeable. Prospective tourists should confirm this information with their travel agents, transportation companies, or hotels

If you feel as deeply as most people about the iron lacework which gives the old buildings of New Orleans' French Quarter their characteristic air of perpetual elégance-come-what-may, begin your next visit there by looking up the "Iron-Ornamental" section in the Classified Telephone Directory. The manufacture of iron lacework, you will find, is very much alive in New Orleans today. And it is a proud business, in which the methods as well as the designs which wrought the lovely decorations of old New Orleans are being meticulously duplicated for the adornment of modern homes and gardens. The artistry of the Lorio Iron Works, for instance, has made it almost impossible to distinguish replaced parts from original in the gallery ironwork of the Pontalba apartments. This and other typical design motifs in the Lorio showroom are ready to be assembled into gates, fences, railings, grilles, pilasters, or made up into garden furniture to order. Hinderer's Iron Works, one of the oldest in the business, offers in addition a line it calls "Fragments of Old New Orleans," gift items like flower pot brackets, andirons, trivets, door knockers, estate signs, small but still authentic in design and exquisite workmanship.

If you plan to leave home for Christmas, Bermuda is one place you can go with more than reasonable assurance you will like it. For, in many ways, Christmas in Bermuda is much like Christmas anywhere. The shops and street lights will be decorated in Hamilton and St. George; hotels will have special festivities between Christmas and New Year's, and there will be a lavish parade with floats. But, in other ways, Bermuda puts on a Christmas as Bermudian as her lavish display of brilliant poinsettias. One feature is the cassava pie on which you will doubtless dine on Christmas day, a native concoction of cassava root, vegetables, chicken, and pork. Another is that a Bermuda Christmas is a two-day feast, including the traditional English Boxing Day, originally a time for dispensing gifts to the help, but today in Bermuda given over to horse racing and enlivened by the Gombey dancers, whose brilliant robes, sewn with bits of ribbon and mirror, fill the streets with color. This Christmas, moreover, you can take advantage of the minimum $85 round trip air fare planned not only by Colonial and Pan American air lines from New York, Boston, and Washington, but by Aerovias Guest on its new flights from Miami. Between these and low early-season hotel rates, your travel agent should be able to hand you a very nice Christmas-in-Bermuda package indeed! (Continued on page 205)

Christmas in the American Style

Photograph by Somoroff

American Christmas has always belonged to the children

The prelude is a stealthily opened door and a cautious, whispering journey into a tree-lit, toy-strewn wonderland  which yesterday was just the living room. Now comes a little chorus of delighted disbelief, a tearing of paper,  a harmonica's sigh. And then we're off—clickety-click like the fire engine—on an endless  concerto of chattering trains,  bicycle bells, and doll babies that cry for their candy-kissed mothers. And all day long you can hear the angels sing in the blissful overtones of treble laughter.

That's Christmas, American Style.

Christmas comes to us from all over

by Marion Gough

It may surprise and disappoint you to know that Santa Claus is not an American, no matter what a lot of people may be saying these days. The idea of giving Christmas presents didn't start in America, either. Nor did the Christmas tree, Christmas cards, plum pudding, carol singing, bell ringing, marzipan, or that fine, rewarding institution called hanging up the stocking. We hate even to mention this, but accuracy demands that it go into the record: In our earliest days it was against the law to say as much as Merry Christmas to an old friend—too frivolous and time-consuming, decreed the founders. About the only indigenous Christmas customs America has to offer are cranberry and popcorn tree-trimming garlands—and very nice they are, if we do say so, although not exactly famous the world over. Actually, the traditions that make the warp and woof of our candle-lit, fir-scented festival come, in symbolic melting-pot (Continued on page 182)

We put new faces on old traditions

Consider the conventional Christmas ball—transmuted by glitter, tinsel, paper, and a sense of fun into a clown, a chorister, an angel, Santa Claus, or (opposite) a smart fish. Staples-Smith.

We've evolved our own brand of Gleam, Glitter and Greenery

We don't spare the dazzle

We seem to have a gift for glitter. Witness our sumptuously angelic friend, in gilt plastic, ruffled and haloed in metal mesh. Courtesy of Lord & Taylor.

We can't help being practical

Double-duty-mindedness produces Twirl-About tree (right) and sphere (opposite), three-dimensional hanging cards to send or hang on tree. Boot trims tree or package. Austen Display.

We have a festive flair for plastics

No fussy intricacies for us

We like suggestive simplicity—a paper chain of jewel-eyed, candy-buttoned gingerbread men. Austen Display; a bold block, really a gift box, Staples-Smith.

We decorate with Christmas cards

With everybody sending everybody else Christmas cards, where do you stash them? Designer Jane Kidder created this way to hang them on the wall, inserted in clips of a 30″ white wire tree silhouette. By itself, it's decoration.

We make a tree trim itself

This fabulous sparkle is a typical American solution to Christmas in a small space. The tree, 16″ high, is a piling-up of 20 clear, tinsel-filled pastel balls on a wire upright. Packs in paper box. Courtesy, Lord & Taylor.

Felt instead of fir—why not?

We're developing a national open-mindedness about accepting new versions of familiar objects. Close-quarter householders would love a tree of fringed felt, sequined, hung with jingle bells, easy to fold away till next year. William Streeter.

SKETCHES BY JOSEPH E. POWERS

We change the color but not the spirit

Instead of holly red and ivy green, we'd as soon celebrate with daring rose pinks, blue-green, chartreuse, all gay and "different." Ferris-Shacknove tree, courtesy Lord & Taylor, is 30″ of Yankee ingenuity. Sparkling branches are really demountable brushes (see sketch). It's a help-yourself-to-a-gift tree, hung with neatly scotch-taped and beribboned packages, all done in color-coördinated wrappings courtesy of Dennison's Gift Wrappings. Fresh roses on the tree are a long-forgotten tradition revived. Furniture by Charak Furniture Company.

We're outdoor-conscious at Christmas

It's traditional in America to trim our doorways for Christmas, but it's also traditional to give an old idea a new switch—like this giddily home-painted plywood panel used as a holiday cover on a front door. Four slim brads hold it in place. It's non-wilting, removable, storable. Peter Hunt painted it in Duco Enamel. It's easy. See how on page 192.

An outside tree is a tradition

Our night-lighted outdoor trees are an almost exclusively American institution, but we'll try to improve on any institution. To add color and melody, Peter Hunt sprays an evergreen with Duco Undercoater, then he decks it with dozens of brass Bells of Sarna to play a sweet carillon in the wind.

We don't mind being different

On the merry subject of Christmas, we flatly refuse to be deep-thinking and sociological. But it's fun to see how, even in our observance of so traditional a holiday, we extemporize, experiment, and defy the conventions with thoroughly American gusto, while such national traits as practicality, inventiveness, and a flair for simplicity reveal themselves in our most light-minded trappings.

If we couldn't invent the age-old custom of making Christmas a season of kaleidoscopic color and beautiful nonsense, we have certainly devised a whole new approach to the coloration and materials of which our Christmas is made. We have even invented new objects—like demountable, small-scale trees for people who live in close quarters, and gadgets for displaying Christmas cards—practical products, really, because urgent American needs dictated them. And we have, as if by second nature, given new interpretations to old traditions.

Characteristically, we tend to blow up the size of things, to stress large-scale effectiveness rather than perfect and intricate smallness—proof that we've been visually conditioned by our own American display artists, a uniquely skilled coterie of designers whose shop windows and interiors are carefully calculated to intrigue the eye in a flash.

Most significantly, we turn out this glamour in almost endless variety, so that there is always something to please everyone—a pleasant phenomenon of abundance, possible only with a restless people who cannot bear to be regimented, and who thrive on obsolescence.

Haven't you noticed such signs in the decorations on these seven pages? They're hallmarks of our own, home-grown brand of Christmas.

We get big effects from simple stuff

We give the ready-made a personal touch

Americans don't like to do anything the hard way, so we are great consumers of the ready-made ornament. But we're basically individualists, so we don't use the ready-made as is. Mrs. John W. McPherrin, for instance, dreamed up this charming way of enhancing a group of colorful caroler dolls, setting them on the star-shape shelves of a white-painted plywood "tree." Carpenter cut the four graduated stars, which slide onto a gently graduated tree stem. Below, the wherewithal—ribbons, candles, Duco cement. Wire coils hold candles.

With snips of paper lace, doilies, valentine papers, foil, ribbon, and sequins, see how Mrs. McPherrin does a glittering metamorphosis on plain candles. Brass map tacks hold trimming in place, become part of design. Paper, ribbon get serrated edge via pinking shears.

Usefulness that Sparkles

the American Style in Glass

For the past nine months we have been drawing your attention to the inevitable coming-of-age of America's own native style, the essential American "look" which has been in the making ever since our country began. Simplicity, multi-usefulness, and a sort of casual, realistic elegance are its earmarks. On these 15 pages see it interpreted in the logical, simple beauty of the glassware we Americans choose to live with

Our peculiarly American taste for ice water dictates the size, shape, and function of much of our glass. Distinctively ours is the water pitcher with the pinched, ice-straining lip. Our water glasses are the world's largest. Pitcher and tumblers, West Virginia Glass Specialty Co. Eagle-patterned Sandwich glass cup plate from C. W. Lyon, Inc.

What Makes the

This is a sampling of American Style glass. But to understand why it is what it is, see how it fulfills the demands of certain characteristic traits of ours which have been molded, ever since our country began, by our history, climate, and land.

Observe here our insistence on simplification—heritage of a hard pioneer beginning. It appears in uncomplicated shapes and restrained, often non-existent ornament. We've a passion for practicality, for things which work efficiently without coddling. Isn't this apparent in our short-stemmed, easy-to-grab, quickly cleaned stemware, in pitchers that handle and pour neatly, in our colored, pressed, etched, or textured glass that doesn't need endless polishing?

Our humid summers, ice-producing winters, and pioneer poverty made us ice-water drinkers while the rest of the world bibbed wine. Our ice fetish created the necessity for such exclusively native objects as 12-ounce water goblets, ice tea glasses, crushed-ice coupettes for fruit and seafood. Our quick living tempo produced the cocktail—and the cocktail glass. Our land of plenty gave us our philosophy of abundance—and the divided relish dish to hold something of everything. Nothing is here for looks alone. That's one of the most significant hallmarks of the American Style.

Glastonbury's "Laurel Wreath" footed tumbler is designed to serve a purely American phenomenon—ice tea. Cambridge's "Pristine" divided relish dish is evidence of typical American pride in the groaning board. Fostoria's "American" pressed glass water goblet (top), Morgantown's "Spanish Crinkle" beverage glass from Carbone, and Lotus's floral-etched sherbet have practical, textured surfaces that keep well-groomed without polishing.

American Style in Glass?

by Marion Gough

Steuben's cocktail mixer, ice bucket, and teardrop cocktail glasses are modern Americana, created by a home-grown custom. Signet decoration makes mixer and bucket easy to grab, suggests the lily pad, one of the oldest motifs in American-made glass. Hunt's cut-crystal coupette, devised to hold crushed ice and a removable cup for fruit or seafood, panders to the American taste for chilled food and double duty.

We'd use Heisey's broad-cut "Old Williamsburg" tall tumbler for ice tea or high-balls, goblet for water or milk, champagne for seafood or sherbet, juice glass for parfait, cocktail for wines.

The LONG and SHORT of a Glass Wardrobe

This is the complete line of Imperial's "Flare"—three tumblers, cagily sized to serve any drink from cocktails to coffee. Russel Wright designed them of smudge-defying seed glass, in four colors.

With our native American talent for simplification, we're tending now to make a few glasses do the work a dozen used to do. See how these eminently sensible "short lines" would clear the closet of deadheads, for every piece serves two or more purposes. None is for rare occasions only. By concentrating usefulness into a few pieces like this, you could afford to own several different sets of glass

From Libbey's "Coin Cut" pattern we selected this quintet as most likely to be multi-useful. Despite its smart look, it's machine-made and inexpensive.

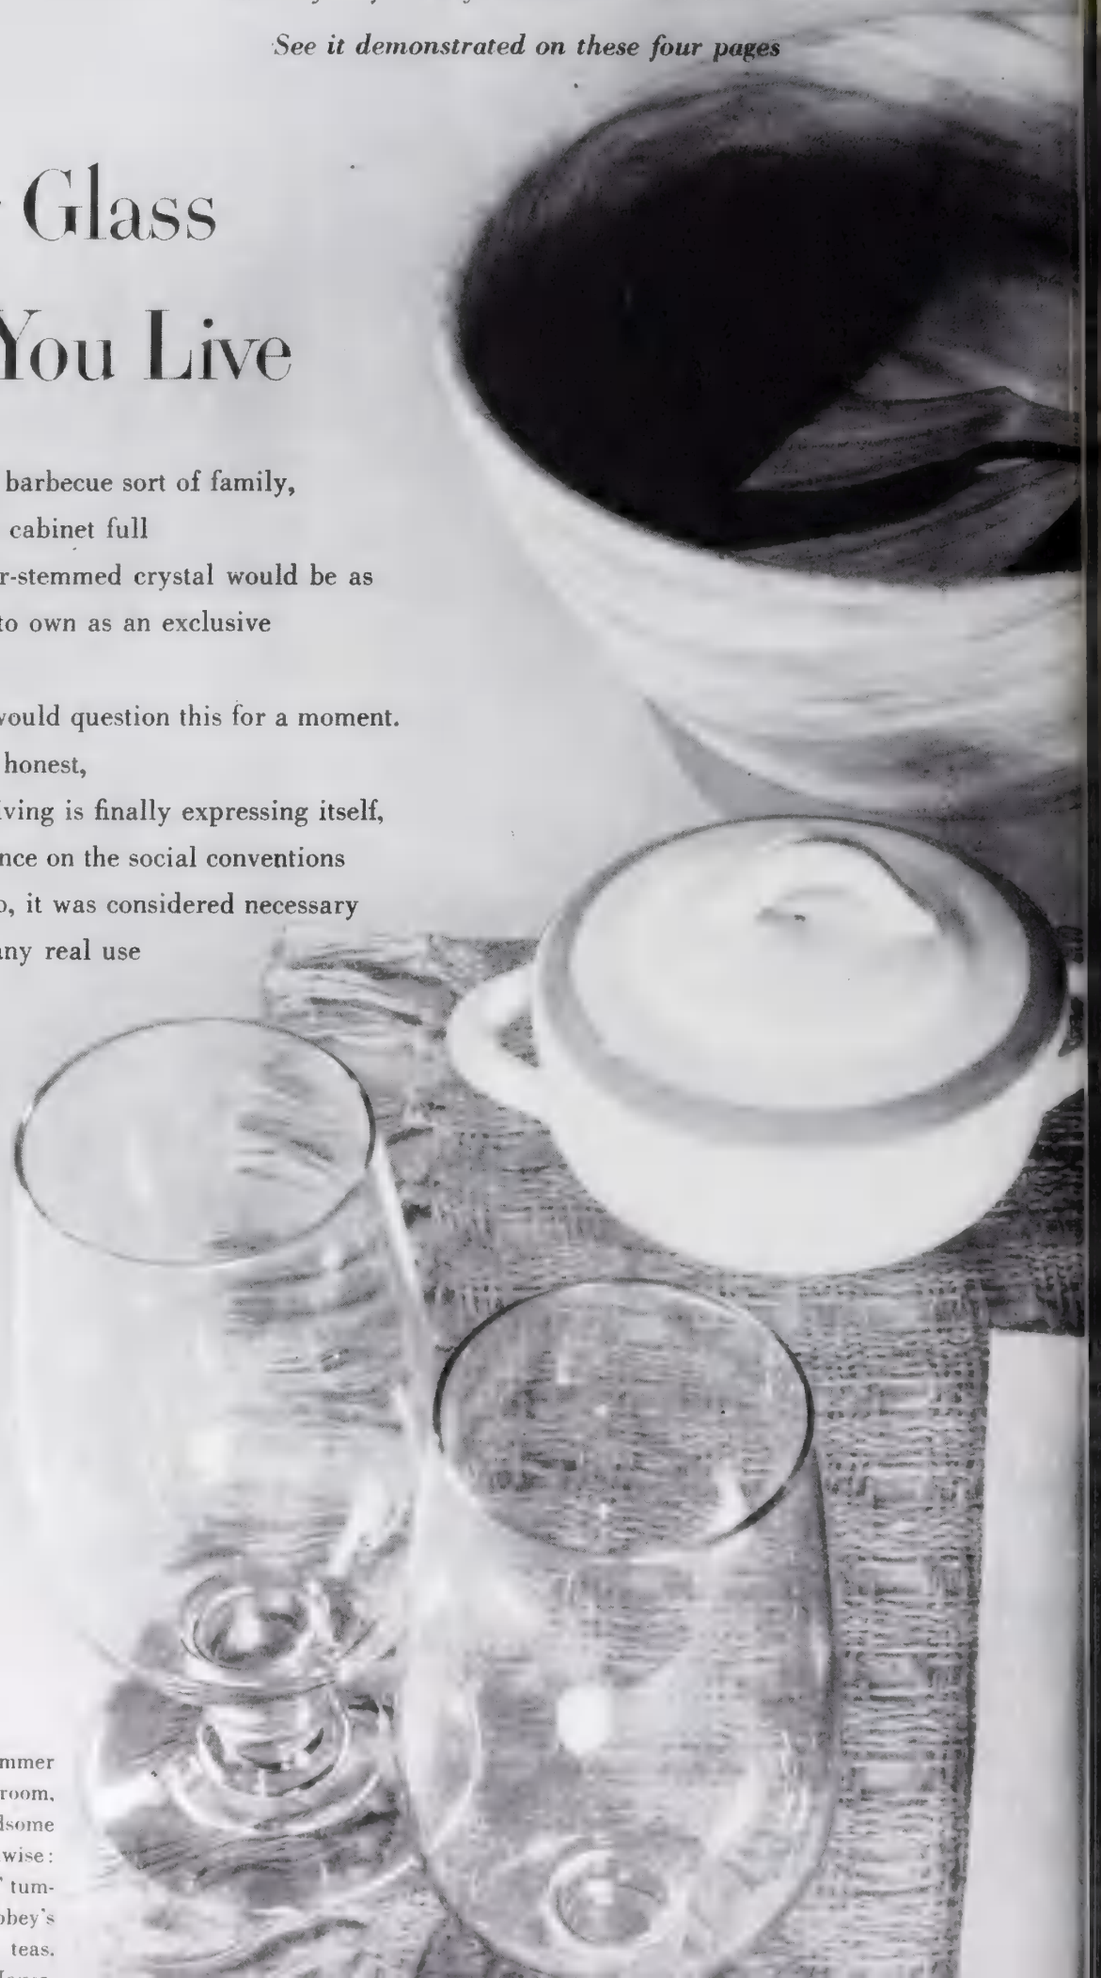
This short-stemmed threesome is Seneca's "Pirouette," especially significant because it is the newest line of the same manufacturer who makes the soup-to-nuts assortment below.

Can you identify the 13 glasses below?

The 13 glasses below show you how far you could go if you were a stickler for convention—and if you had the need and storage space for such a line-up of special purpose glass. In Seneca's "Hospitality" pattern, they are:

1. Pony Brandy
2. Balloon Brandy
3. Sherry
4. Sparkling Burgundy
5. Hollow Stem Champagne
6. Claret
7. Saucer Champagne
8. Water Goblet
9. Parfait or Stem Whisky Sour
10. Cocktail
11. Delmonico or Whisky Sour
12. Old Fashioned
13. High-ball



It's significantly American that no one kind of glass is considered exclusively "correct." Appropriateness is the criterion, whether you live casually or formally. Read about this below. See it demonstrated on these four pages

Match Your Glass to the Way You Live

If yours is an outdoor terrace and barbecue sort of family, living in levis and loafers, a glass cabinet full of nothing but bubble-thin, slender-stemmed crystal would be as incongruous a possession for you to own as an exclusive wardrobe of evening clothes.

Today no modern American would question this for a moment. And that in itself is proof that an honest, native American attitude toward living is finally expressing itself, after generations of timid dependence on the social conventions of the Old World. Not too long ago, it was considered necessary to own—whether or not you had any real use for it—as thorough-going a set of "good" stemware as you could possibly (Continued on page 199)

If you specialize in casual meals

For a help-yourself household that concentrates summer eating outdoors and winter entertaining in the game room, here's solid, smartly rugged, easy-to-grab glass in handsome harmony with pottery, rough linens and wood. Clockwise: Viking's ruby goblets; Imperial's pinched "ripe olive" tumblers; Heisey's "Old Williamsburg" ice tea glasses; Libbey's "Emerald" tumblers; Karhula's "Silja" footed ice teas. Casserole, Finland House. Other accessories, American Home

If you live informally but never forget the niceties...

These four glasses—graceful, practical, easy-to-handle—suggest a type of glass which most Americans find most appropriate most of the time. They express our attitude toward informal but good living, "Let's not put on airs, but let's not put our elbows on the table, either." Neither delicate nor robust, these semi-lightweights have a textural affinity for fine earthenware and firmly woven linen mats. With an extra assortment of colored glass, you always have the makings of unusual table settings.

All linen from Masse.

If there's a formal side to your scheme of things . . .

This is glass typical of the American grand manner—exquisite, indeed, but simply shaped, restrained in ornament, pleasant to handle. Few of us could use it every day, for its fineness needs such delicate complements as satiny damask or mist-sheer appliquéd linen, translucent china, cherishable sterling. But, if your menage copes easily with elegance, it's loveliness worth owning.

button-stem cordial with sparkling cut band, "Old English" by Hunt;

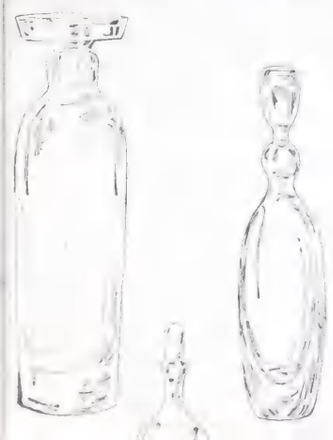
Linen from Leron. Silver, Lenox dinner plates,
Hammersley bone china coffee cup and fruit plate, Black, Starr & Gorham.

Fresh fruit and port wine couldn't be simpler, but unexpectedly served in milk glass, they're an eventful dessert. "Wicket" plate and "Della Robbia" stemware are by Westmoreland.

Try such showmanship as honeydew melon balls, color-schemed with smoke-gray "American Modern" glass and brown plate. Russel Wright, designer. By Richards Morgenthau.

Pineapple ice acquires nothing short of magnificence in an elegantly cut, ruby-cased crystal finger bowl. All glass, "Paul I" by Val St. Lambert. Silver on the page, Lunt's "Memory Lane."

Play up the valentine delicacy of a dessert like coeur à la crême with Fenton's "Silver Crest" fluted white glass plate. Blue-tinted glass, Kosta's "Bernadotte." Linen by Mosse.



By virtue of its innate glow and glitter, almost all glass is potential table glamour. But to give simple meals the impact of galas, learn the artful use of unusual shapes and colored glassware. Then make pictures—instead of mere courses—of appetizers, salads, and/or desserts

Sparkle Makes a Meal a Masterpiece

Here are three shrewd—hence typically American—investments in table-setting sparkle. Each works as elegantly as it looks. Glass and silver epergne by Silver City might also serve salad or ice cream. Float a flower in this endlessly usable "Water Lilies" bowl of Verlys crystal, and you have a spectacular centerpiece. Quaker Silver's tear-drop crystal and sterling candlestick gives you glimmering glamour while it lights the table.

Glass Can Shine in More Ways than One

With some of our better modern glassware, the rich, full life is the double life. How natural, when storage space in America is so precious! There are decanters which perform as competently in the kitchen or bathroom as in the liquor closet. A cake plate may be as useful topsy-turvy as right-side-up. Or you can gain extra shelf room by nesting several platters together as a decorative centerpiece, using them solo as you need them. Materials do the work Left, you don't need to polish the stainless steel top of this coffee table, or to wax the wormy chestnut with its natural bold grain accented by a distressed finish. Texture of upholstery on sectional sofa tends to resist stains even though elegant fabric is predominantly white.

Texture provides richness

Elegance is as much a matter of looks and feel as it is of cost. Right, it comes from the glow of the leather table top, the texture of the woods, the roughness of the natural linen upholstery.

THIS IS AMERICAN STYLE

The American Marriage of Elegance and Easy Upkeep

There was a time when Americans shied away from the word "elegance." It seemed to suggest so many things that were distasteful to us—the stiff formality of footmen and parlor maids, the hours of scrubbing and polishing by anonymous charwomen, the ostentatious display of costly materials. But the word has come back into its own since we discovered that living in effortless ease doesn't necessarily call for back-breaking toil behind the scenes, or for hand-and-foot service by human attendants. You can get the same results by surrounding yourself with things that do the work for you. Furnishings in the contemporary American Style have the qualities that make for elegance built into them. The effortless ease is guaranteed to you by designs, materials, and finishes that take care of themselves.

This collection of American Style furnishings, assembled by Interiors for Living, makes a significant contribution to our new kind of elegance. Look at the design of the furniture. You can't tag it with the label of any particular period. Here and there a line or a corner reminds you of some era of elegance in the past. But never does the designer sacrifice convenience or ease of upkeep in order to turn out an authentic version of a traditional style. The finishes don't call for constant vigilance or constant polishing to protect them from scratches, because they already have a texture which seems to swallow up scratches as they occur. In many cases, table tops covered with modern materials like stainless steel, which shrugs off the mark of a lighted cigarette or the ring from a wet glass with equal aplomb.

See how the materials provide visual and textural richness without burdening you with the perishability of satin and lace and gold leaf. The gleam of leather, the airy sleekness of caning, the tweedy surfaces of upholstery fabrics, the lusty grain of chestnut emphasized by white lead rubbed into its pores—all are as satisfying to look at and to touch as they are easy to keep up.

All of these trouble-free ingredients go to make up the kind of rooms in which, for all their elegance, you can relax and be yourself. In other words, elegance works for you.

Look for surfaces that are broken up by close patterns, uneven textures, or prominent graining, if you want furnishings that will keep their freshness without constant care. A leaf design like the one at far left, printed on a slightly textured mohair fabric with modern metallic dye that won't rub off, will maintain its richness. Footmarks vanish from carpeting woven in uneven rows of uncut loops. Finger marks are lost in the close, all-over background designs of fabrics and wallpapers such as those at left and below. Yet the very qualities that make these materials easy to keep also give them their look of elegant richness.

Did you know you can have the very best in sound motion pictures right in your own living room? A projector makes a superb present for your family

by Lloyd Shearer

Did you know that you can now show some of the greatest movies of all time—complete with sound—in your own home? And we don't mean those stiff, amateurish shots of your grinning family and friends that were "home movies" back in the 1930's.

This time you can invite guests in to see stars like Laurence Olivier, Irene Dunne, Clark Gable, Clifton Webb, and Claudette Colbert in full-length professional feature films.

To show professional sound movies at home, you need a 16-millimeter sound motion picture projector. More of these projectors (200,000 last year) are being sold to American homeowners than ever before, and especially to suburban young-marrieds, families with children, retired couples, shut-ins, people who live in rural areas. But home movies are everybody's meat. They're wonderful as the main dish for a party. You just thread your own projector with rented 16mm films, and show sound motion pictures of your own choice in your own comfortable living room, garden, guest house, cellar. barn, or outside on your patio in warm weather. It's as simple as that. You don't have to get the car out or dig up a baby-sitter. You don't have to time your arrival for the beginning of a show.

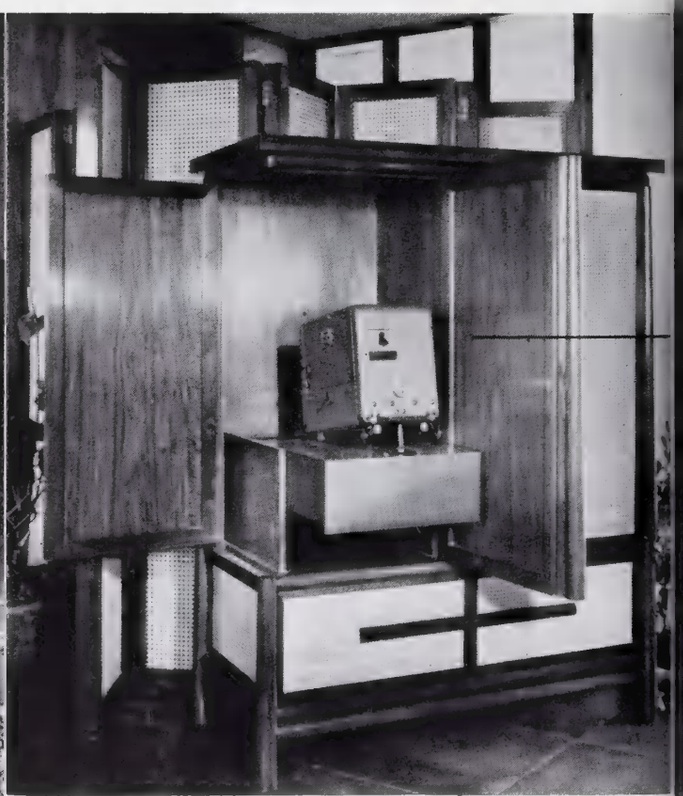
If your home has one 12-foot room, all you need to enjoy these movie pleasures are a projector, a screen, and some film. These are available practically everywhere in the U. S. for money.

The 16mm sound motion picture projector ranges in price from $150 to $2,250. Approximately $400 will buy an excellent machine. A recent survey of 35 Los Angeles families who own 16mm sound projectors reveals that their average cost per projector was $310. These projectors show both sound and silent films.



The eight most widely used 16mm sound projectors are Bell & Howell, RCA, Eastman Kodak, Ampro, Natco, Victor Animatograph, De Vry, and Movie-Mite (not listed in the order of quality or popularity).

One of the basic advantages of the 16mm projector is its portability. It consists of a projector, amplifier, and speaker. In some instances, all three parts come in one case. Typical dimensions of such a case are 16 inches long, 16 inches wide, 12 inches deep. This means that a sound projector presents no storage problem. You can keep it in any closet, shove it under any bed, load it in any car. Unlike the fixed projection set-up in your local motion picture theaters, a 16mm showing can be held in any club, office, community house, church, or even at any country crossroads under the stars.

The projector is relatively easy to operate and take care of. It calls for no special technical ability or manual dexterity. Thousands of school teachers and servicemen run them every day. If you can load and run an ordinary still camera, then you can thread and run a 16mm sound projector.

All you need to do is study and follow the instruction booklet put out by the manufacturer. These booklets have been expressly written for the layman. They offer exploded views of parts that comprise the projector. They explain simply (Continued on page 167)

If you're building new, or doing structural remodeling in your existing house, you can concoct a scheme like this to house your movie screen. This one rolls down like a window shade from its hiding place in the woodwork over the fireplace. Or, if you consider that a movie screen has eye-appeal in its own right, you might give it a permanent place among other wall surfacings. In any case, try to achieve the craftsmanship of this installation.

Use refinements like these to better your home movies

- Project directly on a blank white wall, eliminating bother of a separate screen. Wall should be smooth but not glossy.

- House your projector permanently in a cabinet next to operator's chair. A small hole for the lens will allow you to run the machine at any time without moving it.

- Install a secondary room light switch next to your projector. Or use a rheostat, if you want to dim your lights gradually to any degree.

- Improve hearing in a hollow-sounding room by adding fabrics, carpet, or commercial acoustical materials that absorb excess reverberation.

- Plan sound movies as part of a complete sound system. Radio, television, record-player, movies—all can be hooked up to one master amplifier-and-speaker.

Pamper Yourself with a Practical Present

This year tag something special for your own house. Give yourself—or someone equally important—a lasting, useful luxury

by Laura Tanner

When the spirit of giving is upon you, why not brighten a needy corner of your own house? So that when the tinsel and after-Christmas clutter is cleared away, you have a lasting treasure for many Christmases. Measured in years of serviceability and pleasure, a good chair or well-wrought chest will cost no more in the long run than the glitter of transitory oddments that are soon forgotten, or the dress you buy for short-lived holiday parties. Treat yourself to one of the house gifts pictured here which would look wonderful Christmas morning tagged "For Us."

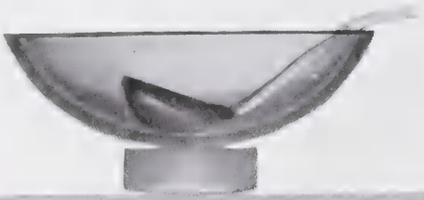
A cliché that has been current for a long time now holds that Americans are allergic to art. This becomes very hard to believe when you look at the steadily increasing figures on museum attendance in this country—more than 50,000,000 annually.

What is true—and what probably gave rise to this misconception—is that Americans are allergic to uselessness. Lately, however, we have been re-examining both our axioms and our art. And we are discovering that a work of art need not be useless at all: that it can possess specific utility besides its traditional one of enhancing one's walls and soothing or stimulating one's spirit. What's more, we have learned that a useful object may be a work of art and still need not cost a mint of money.



We have come to realize that in such utilitarian objects as an ash tray, a cup, a rug, or a silver box can lie aesthetic enjoyment comparable to what one receives from a work of "fine" art conceived for its own sake alone. We are discovering the visual and even the spiritual satisfactions to be derived from a simple object in which there is fitness of form and material to function, harmony of proportion, freshness of color, and decoration applied because it is an excuse for displaying technical virtuosity. We are beginning to see that a beautifully fashioned bowl, like a fine painting, can be an investment for the future which will grow in value as it grows in age. We are discovering that few ways of expressing affection and gratitude to friends can compare with a gift chosen from among these heirlooms of tomorrow. (Continued on next page)

Now this theory that useful objects can be beautiful is by no means revolutionary. Our museums are filled with objects of use which were created many centuries ago by members of savage as well as of highly civilized races, and which we cherish as works of art. The life, religion, and customs of these people are so far removed from our own, however, that we disassociate the objects from their original functions. We admire them for their physical attributes, for a sense of vitality which exudes from them still, forgetting entirely that the carved wooden vessel found on the African Gold Coast and preserved under glass at the museum as a work of art, was once used for pounding grain, and that the delicately wrought metal carving close by it was the belt buckle of a horseman galloping across the Scythian plains in Southern Europe five centuries before Christ.

Much closer to home is our own legacy of American tools, utensils, and furnishings. Museum collections of American folk art, the Index of (Continued on next page)

CHECK THIS LIST TO FIND CRAFTSMEN IN YOUR COMMUNITY

Here is the most complete state-by-state directory of artist-craftsmen yet published

Since the best craftsmen are necessarily small producers, their work is rarely distributed nationally. But you don't have to cross the country to find well-designed handmade articles. Run through this list and you may discover some craftsmen who are almost next-door neighbors.

It includes those whose work has high distinction in the opinion of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, plus others whose work has been cited for excellence by museums and art critics. We regret that it does not represent all the fine craftsmen in the country and that some states are omitted entirely. But that does not imply that there are no craftsmen in those localities.

In most cases we have listed the names of individuals, since fine craftwork is primarily a personal expression. But it may also represent the combined efforts of a husband-and-wife team like the Natzlers and the Scheiers, or of two or three artists working together in small potteries or studios.

American Design at the National Gallery of Art, and similar sources are eloquent proof that useful objects of high artistic value were abundant enough in this country up to a hundred years ago.

But about that date, to borrow Mark van Doren's description, "democracy and machinery got married," and there followed a divorce between art and objects of use. As mechanization rolled over the country, art grew more and more remote from our daily life. The art which, up to then, had entered even the simplest homes in the guise of a beautifully proportioned, honestly wrought, saw-buck table or pewter plate, was replaced by monstrosities turned out by the machine. Vulgarization of taste was inevitable, especially as new fortunes flowed into the hands of people drunk with their new purchasing power and eager to spend their money on objects elaborate and expensive enough to prove their affluence. The machine-made horrors which filled modest homes at least had the virtue of utility. The cast-iron deer that posed (Continued on page 179)

For chilly days: Path leads up to a sun-pocket protected and warmed by house walls on north and west sides. Note, from plan at bottom of page, its direct accessibility from house—no need to expose yourself en route.

Give your family a Climate-Controlled Outdoor Life

by Dr. Joseph E. Howland

For humid days: Raised gravel-surfaced terrace (background) exposes you to whatever breeze there is. Same terrace is useful to get full sun-heat on sunny spring and fall days of no wind but when air is cold.

For windy days: Many times you need only the protection of a wind-shield, fence, or hedge to be comfortable. Shelter house offers additional wind protection, also shade, fireplace heat, and a rainproof cover.

You can't do anything about the over-all climate of your community, but you can fix the climate in your own yard. For instance, you can extend the comfortable season in your garden by many weeks—both spring and fall. You do this by the way you arrange your plants, pavings, fences, and hedges. The cost is small. It's mainly a matter of planning—a good wintertime gardening activity. No one change you make affects the climate drastically, but each change helps, and the sum total does the trick.

The H. H. Verwoert garden shows how you can climate-control an existing garden. The old retaining walls dictated the shape of the new garden but now the owners have three big outdoor living areas where they can live, even when it's (1) windy, (2) humid, or (3) uncomfortably chilly.

For terraces with a view: glass windshields are practical outdoors. This one has been exposed to high winds for four years without any sign of damage.

Make it easy to get from one terrace to the next. But don't use more paving than is actually needed. It traps and stores heat, then radiates it at you.

Evaporation from garden pools cools the air nearby. So pools should be located near sitting areas where the coolness can be enjoyed on hot sunny days.

Climate-Controlled Outdoor Life

It's not enough, of course, that the garden be comfortable. To be really useful for living it must offer privacy. Actually most climate-control gardens automatically provide this. Because the same elements that channel good weather into your yard and keep out the bad also shut out the eyes, noises, and dirt of the outside world.

The Verwoert remodeling was done in 1946. At today's prices, costs would be about $600 for the shelter house, $2.75 per linear foot for wood fence (complete with cap), $4.35 per linear foot for glass fencing, 12¢ per sq. ft. for lawn, $1.50 per sq. ft. for flagstone, and $225 for the pool. Sounds like a lot? Well, add up the comforts and you'll agree it's a worthwhile gift to the family. After all, a garden is supposed to pamper you, and might just as well do a thorough job.

Flowers thrive in the protection of windscreens, need fewer waterings and no staking. Added advantage: Color show seems greater because of its background.

and clearly how to run your machine. The salesman who sells you a projector will spend as much instruction time with you as you require.

Available for $1 is a pamphlet entitled, "The Audio-Visual Projectionist's Handbook." You can buy it at any photographic shop. It contains diagrams of all the leading 16mm sound projectors, with simple instructions and diagrams on how to run them.

When you buy a sound projector, you ordinarily buy a screen with it. Screens cost anywhere from $15 to $100, depending upon their size, quality, tripods, etc. A very good one (52″ x 70″), the best size for home use, will cost you approximately $35.

Screens come in several types. You can buy one which hangs from the wall or ceiling. Another type with a back support is good for table-standing. A third kind, generally considered the most utilitarian, is the tripod type which is a portable job with collapsible legs that can be moved at will and set up anywhere that you want it.

Once you have your projector and screen, the next problem is films. What categories of 16mm motion pictures are available? Where can you get them? And how much do they cost?

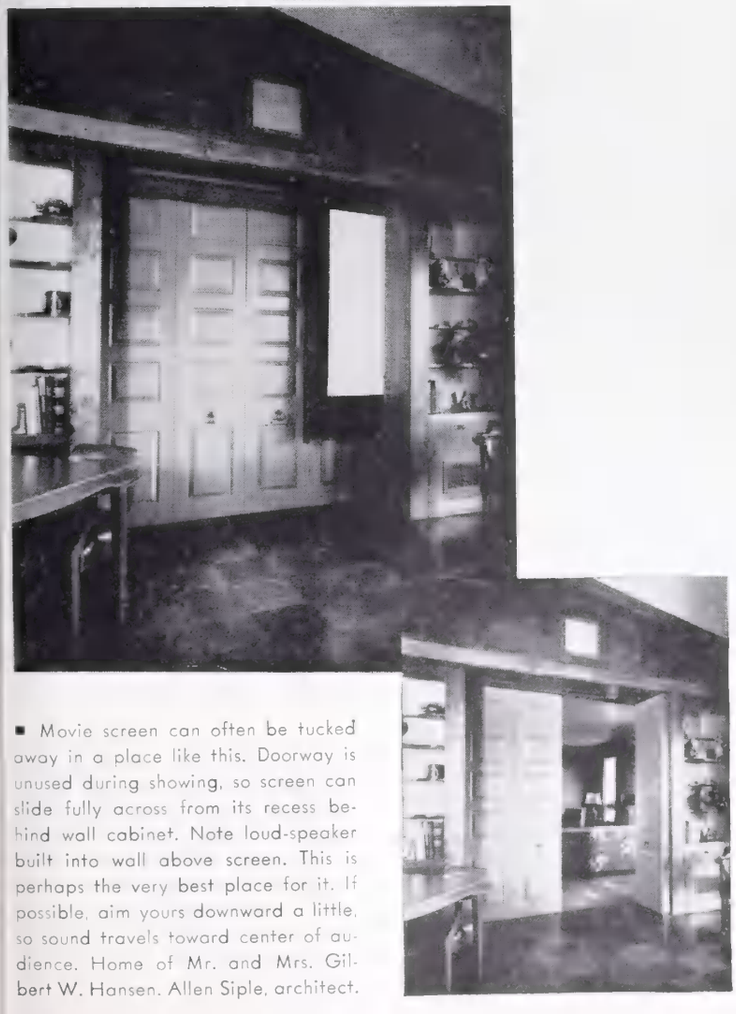
This means that a 16mm print exists for practically every 35mm film currently being shown in your local theater.



Unfortunately, some major studios do not sell, lease, or rent their latest 16mm motion pictures in the United States. These studios own or control hundreds of movie houses throughout the country, and they see no sense in competing with themselves. They reserve their 16mm output for foreign distribution.

Other studios, however, like

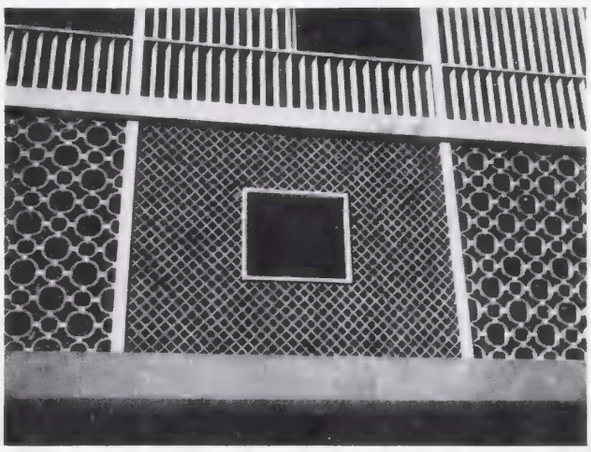
Take a trip to a world of new design

To have fun on your vacation, yet come home the wiser, go to Brazil to play, and see how Climate Control could remake your summers, as it is remaking the face of Rio

PHOTOGRAPHS BY CARLOS—RIO

by Peter J. H. McAllister

Among the many devices used by Rio architects to reduce the crushing weight of the tropical sun, none offers more charm or is more effective than the climate-control measure in Lucio Costa's new apartment house in the Parque Edwardo Guinle. Front of building is also its service side. Each apartment has a private service porch hidden behind attractive shade-making grilles and louvers that admit light and air, but keep out sun. Different sections of the building use different materials of varying colors and designs.



When you board your plane for Brazil, you start one of the most exciting travel adventures on the docket. For Brazil and its fabulous capital, Rio de Janeiro, have all the stimulating things to see and do that a vacationing American wants. But it has something more that makes it especially appealing to HOUSE BEAUTIFUL readers. It has a new brand of architecture that will help you improve your living at home.

For the Brazilians have learned one thing that we North Americans have been very slow to grasp: They have discovered the trick of how to live comfortably in hot weather, of how to temper the fierce sun of a tropical summer. Rio is about as far from the equator as Havana, and for a large part of the year the sun beats down with an intensity that has caused architects to say, "We've got to do something about that!" So, to out-maneuver the sun, they have invented a great variety of sun-shading devices that keep out the scorching rays but let in the full breeze. And they make these sun shades as beautiful as they are functional.

You will find when you get there that Brazilian leadership in Climate Control is not an accident. Brazilians are an original people. Because they speak Portuguese on a vast continent where nearly everyone else speaks Spanish, they have developed a strong individuality that makes them different from other South Americans. Isolated by their language, they have been closer to Europe than to their neighbors. Much of the charm of Rio is due to a piquant blending of European and indigenous Brazilian cultures.

Brazilians are interesting and original because there is no other group like them anywhere. The early settlers were already a rich blending of strains from many old Mediterranean stocks. In Brazil these strains became further blended with those of native Indian stock and later with African Negroes. (Brazilians are nearly free of racial prejudice and have intermarried for more than a century with Negroes and Indians. As a result, some of their leading scientists, artists, and military men have had Negro and Indian blood. It is true, however, that some of the old families are proud of their undiluted stock which they trace back to Portugal.) The people have close cultural ties with France as well as Portugal. If you know Paris, you will quickly see the influence of French architects on Rio. More than 100 years ago, a French architectural mission was invited to Brazil and their influence still persists. (Continued on page 186)

Painted wood louvers and terra cotta tiles in natural clay colors are the materials that make the sun shades and hide the service porches on this Lucio Costa apartment house. Any of these designs could be copied at home—for porches that need privacy, shade and breeze, or for garden walls that must not block the breeze in a muggy climate.

■ All you have to do to set up this projector is move a few books. If the only place for your projector is on a table in front of the bookshelves, use this trick to get both projector and table out of the way. The closet behind the bookshelves gives you a real projection booth.

available titles, tells you how long each picture runs and where you can obtain it. It also lists the locations of all 16mm film libraries and film dealers in each of the 48 states. You can find local dealers in the classified section of your telephone directory, or by inquiring at any one of your local photographic shops.

IN MANY communities, there are dealers who will rent you four or five films at a flat monthly rate. This fee also includes the care and servicing of your projector, and it ranges from $20 to $40. In many communities, subscribers to these rental services swap films among each other so that many of them see 12 or 15 films per month for the original price.

You can also buy 16mm films outright and build up your own film library, but the outright purchase is fairly expensive. A sound short starts at $17.50 and a full-length film will set you back approximately $200.

Many 16mm projector-owners shoot their own films with a 16mm motion picture camera. This is an excellent way of recording and preserving family history. Color film costs more than black and white, but requires nothing extra in the way of camera or projector.

Let's say you've bought a 16mm sound projector, a screen, and you've rented some film. What is the next procedure and the best room layout for good projection?

First of all, set up your equipment. Place your projector on a stand at one end of the room and your screen at the opposite end. If you can locate your projector in an adjoining closet or room and make a wall cut-out for the lens, so that for all intents and purposes you have a separate projection booth, that's perfect. But ordinarily, you can do this only if you have a sound projector in mind when you plan and build your house.

Anyway, you've set up your projector and screen. Place the loudspeaker slightly above and in front of the audience. For best results, it should face downward and toward the center of your audience.

You can do little about the acoustics of the room unless you've planned things beforehand. Try, however, to minimize reverberation with some sound-absorbing material. There are a host of such materials, ranging from acoustical boards and plaster to heavy fabrics for upholstery and draperies.

If you want your guests to enjoy your 16mm showing, then you must be careful in seating them. Here are some recommendations from the Society of Motion Picture Engineers:

1. The farthest seat from the screen should be no more than six times the width of the picture. Thus, if you're filling a 6-foot screen with your picture, no one should be sitting more than 36 feet away from it.

2. Never seat any guest closer than twice the width of the picture. In other words, seats should keep a 12-foot distance from a 6-foot screen.

3. The spectators' viewing angle should be limited to 30 degrees. This means that no row of seats should be longer than its distance from the screen.

4. See that your room is ventilated adequately.

5. Make sure that your electrical connections are out of the audience's way.

Before you interrupt conversations and seat your guests for a showing, make certain that everything is in good order. You can clean all the machine surfaces over which the film passes with a dab of alcohol or carbon tetrachloride. Thread your projector and see that the film passes through quickly and smoothly. Warm up the amplifier, focus the picture, adjust volume and tone, and you are ready to assemble your audience.

After the showing, rewind your film, return projector and screen to their proper storage places. With ordinary care and occasional lubrication, most modern projectors will give lengthy service without any sort of major repairs.

THE tremendous growth in the manufacture and sale of 16mm sound projectors during the past five years is indicative of the constantly increasing number of American families who have found them rewarding, educational, and pleasure-giving.

If you're interested in bettering your living, throughout the year, wrap up some 16mm sound movie equipment and give it to your family from Santa Claus. You'll find it one Christmas present that won't stay hidden in a closet.

If you are designing a new house, you have an unparalleled opportunity today to plan a really complete entertainment system—sound movies, AM and FM radio, television, home recording and record playing—using high fidelity components. All these items can be built-in, out of the way, in a planned acoustical environment, and hooked up to one high-fidelity amplifier and built-in speaker. One beauty of this is that you can plan such a system when you plan your house, then add the necessary electronic components as you can afford them in the future. The possibilities of such a system are endless: Your sound movie projector might fit permanently into the "arm" of your built-in sofa. Right next to it you could have a rheostat allowing you to dim the room lights to any degree you want. Your picture could project directly on a blank white wall designed for the purpose, saving you the price of a separate screen and its storage space. Or you might design for projection from behind the screen an arrangement which eliminates the necessity of darkening the room to pitch blackness. An imaginative designer can work wonders with electronic components, giving you high fidelity and utmost convenience with minimum cost, since you need buy only the bare components (no cabinetry, no duplication of amplifiers and speakers). For more details, see "Wire Your House for Sound" in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, August 1950.

RESIDENCE OF MR. and MRS. CEDRIC ADAMS
Architect, NORMAN R. JOHNSON, St. Paul, Minn.
Builder, CARL M. HANSEN, Minneapolis, Minn.

THE friendly informality of Cedric Adams' newspaper column and news broadcasts have long made his name a household word in Twin Cities homes. Today, a national TV and radio personality, Cedric's easy, comfortable manner and broad smile have won millions of new friends across America.

Recently he built himself a new home in Minneapolis. It was designed from stem to stern for pleasant living. The heating system received the special attention it required in a home of this type—zone control of different living areas to maintain ideal temperature conditions in all rooms at all times.

The Adams home has four properly located Honeywell thermostats. Some homes require but 2, while larger homes may require 5 or more thermostats, depending upon the number of rooms, area of ground covered, exposures to sun or storm. But most larger homes can't get along comfortably on one thermostat. The home you are planning is probably one of them!

In any event, before you start building, discuss the point with your architect, heating contractor or engineer. Or, mail the coupon for the informative Honeywell booklet, "10 Ways to Heat Your New Home." It's worth getting.

Add and blend in well, 3 cups sifted flour, resifted with ½ tsp. salt and 1 tsp. baking soda. Drop by teaspoonfuls on greased cooky sheet. Bake at 400° F. about 12 minutes. Yield: about six dozen.

Crackles: Beat 2 egg whites until stiff. Fold in mixture of 1 cup rolled graham-cracker crumbs, ⅔ cup sugar and ½ tsp. baking powder. Add ¾ cup chopped pecans. No object, they said, was unworthy of the artist's attention, and in this course, they were right. But they were thinking primarily of the artist as producer, who, through working with his own hands and directly with his material, would thus have restored to him his native dignity. The machine, they felt, was an enslaving abomination, for, as one of the best-known of them, Elbert Hubbard, phrased it, "the curse of the world is joyless labor."

Thus despite the desultory efforts of the few high-minded arts-and-crafters headed by Ruskin, Morris, and Hubbard, both artists and public played their parts in the estrangement of art and usefulness. Therefore, it is not surprising that changed attitudes of both artists and public are reflected in the contemporary revival of fine craftwork for everyday use.

Paradoxically, it is the machine, having first dulled public appreciation of fine handwork, which is now responsible for turning our taste back to it. For the development of machine production inevitably brings standardization, the natural enemy of the human impulse for individual expression. When standardization brings economy, greater efficiency, greater durability, it is quietly accepted. Few of us would object to owning an automobile exactly like our next door neighbor's if we were convinced that particular model was the best one available for the price we could afford to pay. Gradually the same thing is coming to be true of our homes—especially in respect to the larger pieces of equipment and furnishings which represent major expenditures.

But the urge for individual self-expression is still with us. It is even intensified by the prevalence of standardized machine-made objects, much as we value their excellent performance. We have begun to feel the need of a psychological safety-valve which will retain for us, within the framework of our mechanized society, some tangible link with a world where human efforts are expended on a more creative operation than the turn of a screw in a dynamo. So, although we would not sacrifice the mechanical efficiency of our refrigerators, our television sets, or our sofa beds, we realize that it does not take a machine to make an efficient ash tray, a lamp base, or a salad bowl. In selecting these, we can be as individual and unique as it pleases us to b

Our insistence on easy hous keeping also has something to d with our newly awakened appreci tion for the craftsman's art. S many of the new, easy-to-care-f materials for walls and floors an furniture have a sleek, hard aspe that cries for texture and so gradations of color to relieve the cold regularity. But we would n dream of cluttering up our roon with the hundreds of little figurin and souvenirs that grandmothe two maids dusted everyday. In the place we want one or two fine made objects with the ever-chan ing, never-tiring qualities that ma a real work of art.

A third factor that seems to ha stimulated the layman's appreci tion of contemporary craftwork the tremendous increase in cra activity among amateurs as a ho by, and among convalescents as form of therapy. An ex-G.I. w was taught to weave while still a hospital bed, and a stenograph who has learned at her lo Y.W.C.A. the patience it takes wash enamel glazes, are both m likely to understand and value fine piece of craftwork than th would have been before they h tried it themselves.

Meanwhile, the artist's attitu has changed too. Increasingly, modern painting and sculpture, emphasis of the artist has been the form rather than the litera sentimental, or picturesque content of what he was creating. As a result, we have grown accustomed to and learned to value on its own terms, an art in which imaginativeness of color, perfection of proportion, harmony of shape, interest of texture, have counted for more than subject. Whether it is this change in our art orientation which has opened our eyes to the beauty in primitive art, or whether it was a new appreciation of primitive art which led contemporary artists to think in abstract terms, is a moot question.

Whatever the cause, the result has been a steady narrowing down of the machine-age rift between objects of art and of use. For the formal beauties lying in harmony of line, color, shape and texture apart from any consideration of subject are as readily achieved in an object of use as they are in any painting or sculpture.

There are some Deep Thinkers in the arts who will go so far as to tell you that there can be far more profound revelation of the riddles of the universe, of human sensibilities, of instincts and tensions, in the proportions and purity of a Chinese bronze bowl than in a painting in which these express themes are superficially projected in terms of specific theme or obvious symbol.

This is not to say that many of our contemporary artists go along in this line of thought: that they are modeling pottery bowls or fashioning silver boxes because through the making of such objects they feel they can best express their innermost reactions to life and the world. Nevertheless, hundreds of American painters and sculptors who superciliously used to dismiss the arts and crafts idea as productive only of "arts and ends" are now busily engaged in making objects of everyday use without apology, without humility, without feeling that this is a necessary sacrifice at the altar of Mammon. They have discovered that there can be as great a challenge and satisfaction in making a handsome cigarette box as there can be in painting one more version of a familiar landscape, one more arrangement of flowers in a bowl.

CHRISTMAS COMES TO US FROM ALL OVER

fashion, from as many lands and cultures as America herself. Many of them had their beginnings in pre-Christian times, are tangled with the holiday observances of Judaism and the pagan feast-day goings on of ancient Babylon and Rome. The rites of Saturn and the Norse gods and the Druids are sometimes involved. But whatever the origins of the external trappings of Christmas, time and the wonderful alchemy of the Christian meaning of Christmas have knit them all together into a celebration that follows a pretty similar pattern the world over. It adds up to a rather remarkable, anthropologically sound brotherhood of man. For peoples sort of assimilated Christmas as it came their way through the centuries, adding to it their own local customs, without altering its broad form.

America was at the receiving end of a long line of such amalgamations, which is why our celebration is peculiarly rich. We enjoy something of everybody's Christmas, further adapting it to our own tastes and talents for celebrating.

Even if the Puritans started out by being anti-Christmas, there were some pros to the south, a group of settlers with cavalier leanings who took a giddier view of life. They acknowledged the feast primarily with church services, but we can probably thank them for eventually reviving such old-country traditions as evergreen garlands, the yule log, wassail, caroling, and general wining and dining. These had been outlawed in England by stern Mr. Cromwell, who considered church feast days papish nonsense which detracted from the importance of the Sabbath itself. But the celebration, which England had been enjoying vigorously since the Middle Ages, merely went underground until the merrier-minded Stuarts came back.

From England we also inherit plum pudding, mince pie, holly (its thorns trap the evil spirits), and mistletoe, which was considered sacred and curative by the Druids. The general concept of festival stems from the Roman Saturnalia which happened to coincide with the date of the Christian feast. The celebration on December 25th started in Rome between 336 and 353 A.D. The garlands with green boughs, the exchanging of gifts, the lighting of candles, the feasting, visiting of friends and calling of good luck greetings are Saturnalia hangovers, and if you want to be most precise you can track these customs back to Mesopotamia.

In the Norse countries the Christmas season coincided with the feast of the winter solstice, a joyous occasion in those wintry lands because it meant the promise of spring and light. The evergreens here symbolized summer and life and the living spirit which protected against the evils of winter. Mixed with this was a sort of harvest festival, which was celebrated with plenty to eat because the herds had been thinned out before winter and the problem of how to feed them set in. This is where the boar's head got its start (now reduced to a pig with an apple in its mouth), for during that festival the boar, an important source of food, was honored by having his head cut off, roasted, and ceremoniously carried in to the feast.

Where did we get the tree?

We Americans appear to have acquired the Christmas tree and its trimmings from the Germans. It is not the age-old custom in this country which you might imagine. Moravians in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, celebrated in 1747 with a pyramid of green, decorated with candles, apples, and verses. That sounds like a beginning, but until the middle 1800's you hear only of isolated Christmas trees, all of them engineered by a German hand, usually that of a political exile who carried with him a yen for his homeland's Christmas. Fort Dearborn, Michigan, is said to have had a tree in 1804, a German professor at Harvard trimmed one for his little boy in 1836, and in Williamsburg, Va., they still celebrate charmingly the lighting of the first Christmas tree ever trimmed there about 1840 by the German tutor of the St. John Tucker children. There was a tree in Paris in 1840, too. Prince Albert was responsible for the first tree in modern England in 1841. How much this influenced America, who can say, except that by 1851 there was a Christmas tree salesman plying his trade in New York City.

The concept of the tree is very old. In 1561 in Alsace they had to pass an ordinance limiting the size of trees the burghers cut down for their celebration. There's a report that Henry VIII celebrated a Twelfth Night pageant with a tree of gold hung with roses and pomegranates. A travel book of 1605 mentions the way the residents of Strassburg set up fir trees in their rooms and hung on them apples, wafers, gilt, sugar, and roses cut of many-colored paper. (Where the paper came from the writer doesn't say.) And in 1740 a German divine remarks scathingly—about these same merry-making Strassburgers—that they are more concerned with their fir trees hung with dolls and sugar than with their church.

Let us not moralize but reflect that it's quite a coincidence that these trees are trimmed with ornaments remarkably similar to the kind we use—shiny, sweet, of fruits and flowers. The apple, we suspect, suggests the Adam and Eve episode and the Tree of Life, and as a matter of fact, some trees in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries had little figures of our first parents under their branches. Shops in Hamburg sold them. The basis of the fruits and flowers, however, is probably the legend, carried into Europe by an Arabian geographer, that at the nativity the trees of the world burst into fruit and bloom simultaneously. The business of putting the presents under the tree and thus making them part of the decoration seems to be purely English and American.

known to American children is a combination of many things. Our Dutch settlers introduced him as Saint Nicholas who comes secretly on the eve of December 6th to bring gifts to the good children and a switch to the bad. We Americans have changed his clothes from the vestments of a bishop to a fur-trimmed red outfit with boots, and we've moved his visit up to Christmas Eve, but that is nothing compared with the liberties the ages have taken with his personality and appearance. The historically pure Saint Nicholas seems to have been a pious and wealthy young man of Asia Minor who became Bishop of Myra in the Fourth Century. Extremely generous and very modest, he delighted to give help where it was needed, but always anonymously. He is a patron saint of sailors, travelers, merchants, pirates, Russians, Laplanders, pawnbrokers, and of unmarried girls, to say nothing of his well-known role as protector of children.

One of his most spectacular feats foreshadowed the role he plays in Christmas. It had to do with saving the three daughters of a poor nobleman from slavery, by quietly leaving, under cover of darkness on three different nights, a bag of gold for each so that she could face the future proudly with a nice fat dowry and good prospects of a husband. Legend has occasionally changed the details of the story. One version is that the saint threw the gold down the chimney so that it landed in the shoe of each maiden. Do you see where that brings us?—to the good old stocking custom. And if you've lived with the right kind of parents, there has always been an orange, or ball of gold, in the toe. (Those three bags of gold not only became oranges, but long ago turned into the three gold balls of the pawnbroker, supposedly a sign that anything left with him was under the protection of Saint Nicholas.)

Saint Nicholas started out as a thin ascetic bishop, an unquestionable introvert. But as his story crossed Europe and went north, he became identified with a rambunctious chap called Woten or Odin, the vigorous chief of the Norse gods. He rode a white horse, wore a flapping hat and a flowing traveler's mantle. By association, St. Nicholas gained weight and became a bluff, hearty fellow. In North Europe the horse, the hat, and the robe are still his marks. In Holland he still wears his mitre and vestments. In Norway he picked up his reindeers and sled and a helper called Kris Kringle—actually a derivation from the German words for Christ Child—Krist Kindlein. And in America he seems to have grown plumper and rosier, uses a nickname (no pun intended), is sometimes called Kris Kringle himself, and sports an outfit that baffles research.

This rosy-cheeked old fellow attired in red seems to be the visual creation of Thomas Nast, the American cartoonist. And, according to The Night Before Christmas, Dr. Clement Moore, its author, saw eye to eye with Nast.

The Crèche and the Carols

Saint Francis of Assisi is thought to have arranged the first nativity scene as a token of Christmas, setting it up in a church in Greccio, Italy, so that the story could be more graphically presented to the people. Remember, this was in 1226 in the days before the common use of books and pictures. This not only started a tradition which really replaces the tree in Latin countries as a symbol of the season, but it seems to have inspired the Christmas carol.

In France and Italy, the carol was a kind of dance—a dance in a ring. Early carolers apparently fitted to its melodies the words that told about the scene they had witnessed, simply, naïvely, unselfconsciously. And that would account for the merry tempo and the naïve, primitive simplicity of the carols as they have come down to us.

England took a long time to get over the Puritan taboo on Christmas. Charles Dickens, who wrote so gaily and enthusiastically about Christmas merriment in A Christmas Carol and Pickwick Papers, probably had a great deal to do with the revival of the old customs. Certainly Americans for years have associated festivity with the coaching, waistcoated gentlemen and bonneted, bemittened ladies of his era who used to show up so regularly on our Christmas cards.

Who started Christmas cards?

The British seem to be responsible for Christmas cards, although the idea of sending greetings to friends at the holiday season even has a Saturnalian precedent. The first card is supposed to have been sent in 1846. There is a story that a Scotsman started the whole idea by having cards printed in 1841 with New Year's greetings to his friends. In any case, we Americans adopted the card with our usual eagerness to do things up brown, and today the Christmas card custom has come to be one of our most prevalent.

It's interesting to see how one tradition can lead to another. To wit, the Christmas seal. Each year more and more people feel that they haven't quite fulfilled the tradition of sending a card if they haven't finished off the envelope flap with a little sticker that represents the true, helpful spirit of the season. The stamp is sold, as everybody knows, to raise funds to combat tuberculosis, and the records of our TB eradication since the sale of these stamps started in America in 1907 is ample proof that they've done a lot more than brighten up envelopes and Christmas packages.

■ We inherited the idea of the TB Christmas Seal from Denmark

But what lots of people do not know is that the Christmas seal was started in Denmark in 1904 by Einar Holboell, sold in both Denmark and Sweden in that year, and has since become a worldwide anti-TB movement.

Christmas Candles

There's a possibility that our custom of the Christmas candle may be a carry-over of the old Jewish feast of light or Chanuckah, which coincides with our Christmas season. This is a nine-day feast during which candles are set in a nine-arm candlestick, one candle lighted each day, until at the end of the period the whole row is blazing with light.

But it is certain that the candle in the window, lighted on Christmas Eve and large enough to last through the twelve nights of Christmas, is a custom that could have come directly to America from Ireland, Austria, or Finland.

All our Christmas candles, whether they are used generally or set ceremoniously in the window for the whole season, actually are carrying on the Christian idea of lighting the Christ Child on his way so that the spirit of Christmas may eventually enter our homes. It's a switch, no doubt, from the old pagan thinking that the more light you have the less chance the evil spirits will have to get you.

Christmas bell ringing, which doesn't usually go much farther with us than a strap of jingle bells on the front door or a brace of artificial decorative bells hung in a doorway, is another one of those traditions that could be tracked down to the Romans, then traced to the Norsemen. The bell was a pretty handy noisemaker to have around in case of evil spirits' closing in. Noise had played a big part in the old pagan celebrations —and definitely plays a tremendous part in our own New Year's exorcising of last year's demons— so Christmas too was celebrated with as much racket as possible. It was the English, though, who made the bell count. We probably inherit its symbolism from the old English "Devil's Knell." For one hour before midnight on Christmas Eve, they would toll the bell to announce the death of the devil. Then at midnight, great joyous peals would signal the birth of Christ.

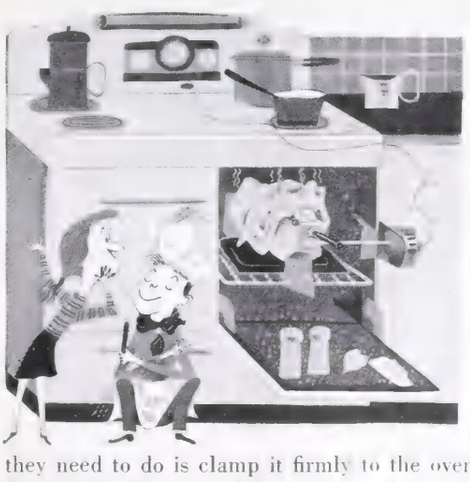
Here's a gift guaranteed to please every member of the family and all their friends of any age. For with the new Westinghouse square waffle baker you can have waffles for all, practically at the drop of the batter. It makes four man-size—and we mean man-size—waffles at once, so unless there is an enormous crowd, nobody will have to wait too long. One of the best things about it is that the grids are pre-treated with a new silicone compound, so Mother doesn't have to worry about greasing them or breaking them in. What's more, the grids can be washed indefinitely without losing their practical finish. Waffle baker has a 1150-watt element, AC only.

For that friend who "has everything," have you thought of an electric sleeping pad? It's warmth will bring comfortable relaxation and that means a restful sleep. The Dormay electric pad looks much like any mattress pad, and is used in the same way over the mattress and under the lower sheet. Since heat rises, this arrangement assures a gentle warmth for the sleeper, only 1½° above normal body temperature. A light blanket or sheet is all that is needed to trap this warmth, which is automatically controlled so pad will not continue to build up heat. Single- and double-bed sizes; AC current only.



When is a mixer a masher, a whipper, a beater, a creamer? When it's an Osterett! This little portable electric mixer is really little, only 6½" long. 2-7/16" in diameter, to fit the hand like a glove. The two beaters themselves are 6¾" long. It can be used in a container as small as a drinking glass, as large as you please. It's powerful motor assures good mixing for heavy batters as well as light. White plastic case, stainless-steel beaters. AC or DC.

What better gift to the busy housewife than extra time and energy? That's what you give her when you select the Universal Stroke-Sav.R iron. For it's so shaped and sized that it covers about 1/3 more ironing surface than usual, which means fewer strokes in less time to do a given piece of ironing. Moreover, it works backward and sideways as well as forward. Also, it has a wide sloping bevel all around the sole plate to slide around buttons, get into tiny ruffles on children's clothes. With all this, it weighs only 3¼ pounds.

Those friends of yours who are fiends for barbecuing, now can indulge their hobby all year round. If they have a Crosley electric range, just give them the new Crosley rotary barbecue. All they need to do is clamp it firmly to the oven rack, and they're off! Now the broiler unit of the range works much like a charcoal fire, to barbecue meat, fish, fowl, and even turkey up to ten pounds in weight. And the food is cooked in about half the time usually needed to cook the same food in the oven. Cord plugs range into convenience outlet.

But the most exciting buildings are the new modern ones. Even a blasé New Yorker, used to Rockefeller Center and the United Nations building, will whistle with amazement at Rio's skyline.

THE way to see Rio for the first time is from the air. From your airplane you get a view that is unequalled in air travel. If you have flown across South America from Peru with Braniff Airways, then your first view of Rio comes as the climax of a day of spectacular scenery of the Andes. You leave Lima after an early breakfast, fly down the coast to Arequipa, over one end of Lake Titicaca (famous because it is the highest lake in the world navigable by passenger steamers), and pass high over La Paz, the capital of Bolivia. You rub elbows with one of the highest volcanoes in the world, glide past dozens of snow-covered peaks, peer down into seemingly bottomless canyons and then fly over the great plains of western Brazil. Anyone with a camera can get remarkable pictures from the airplane windows. Few flights can match the magnificence of the Lima-Rio trip in a comfortable DC-6. Air travel has made a South American vacation possible to those who have as short a time as two weeks for their trip. For you can leave home one day and be in Lima, Rio, or Buenos Aires the next.

Parenthetically, it should be added that combining a trip to Peru with one to Brazil is not as illogical as it appears to those who haven't studied maps. For Peru is due south of eastern United States and a natural stop on the way to either Rio or Buenos Aires. Braniff's fast service from Chicago and the central part of the U.S., feeding out of Dallas, Houston, or Havana, will come as a pleasant surprise to travelers who haven't become familiar with all the ways to get to South America.

After the first surprise of Rio's beautiful natural setting, the second shock comes from the number of new apartment houses. There seem to be hundreds of them—tall, sleek, and with many balconies. These balconies are the first clue to Brazilian climate control. For they not only provide city dwellers with a small outdoor living room, but the floor of each balcony is a sun shade for the windows of the apartment beneath.

As you taxi about the city, you'll see dozens of variations of sun shades. They are of wood, metal, canvas, tile, concrete, bamboo, or straw matting. Some are horizontal, some vertical. Some are fixed in one position, others can be rolled up and down, adjusted like Venetian blinds or manipulated in other ways.

Brazilians are well aware of two facts that we are only beginning to learn: 1. An outside shade is more effective for heat control than an inside window shade. 2. A breeze is a must for comfort in moist heat.

Typical of the fresh design of Rio is Lucio Costa's apartment house pictured at the opening of this article. Although the entrance is on the façade shown in the photographs, that side is really the back of the house.

Another, but much smaller, apartment house of interest is one at 1267 avenida Copacabana, done by the Roberto brothers. They have protected their tenants from sun and sky glare by shades that can be operated from both top and bottom of the windows, to shut out even the horizontal rays of the rising or setting sun.

NEARLY all streets in the better residential areas could serve as a lesson in ways to keep out the sun. Windows often can slide horizontally, with glass being replaced by louvered shutters. Unfortunately for the visitor, many of the best details must be seen from within the apartments to be appreciated.

Most publicized of Rio's large buildings is the Ministry of Education and Health, completed during the war. Six Brazilian architects designed it, with the famous French architect, Le Corbusier, acting as consultant. It is a narrow, 15-story building with glass on two sides—a forerunner in style of the U. N. Secretariat. One side has unshaded windows, but the other which faces north (where the sun comes from) is protected by both vertical and horizontal sun shades, which project out beyond the windows about four feet.

At the near-by A. B. I. building of the Brazilian Press Association, the Roberto brothers used fixed vertical fins of cement on the two sides that get most sun heat. The fins are 32 inches deep and set at an angle that not only keeps out sun heat but makes an attractive light-and-shade pattern. Other new Roberto buildings with important sun-control devices are the Edificio Seguradoras in the downtown area and the I. R. B. building on avenida Marechas Camara. The newspaper, Diario Carioca, has an interesting new modern building with many unusual features for a newspaper structure.

While the showplaces of Rio are the new buildings, some of the most charming are the old ones. Houses going back to the more leisurely days of the past are not easy to find unless you drive around looking for them. One group you will enjoy is in an ancient dead-end square called Beco do Boticario, which is just off the rua Cosme Velho, the main route going up to the Corcovado. Here are several reconstructed old houses with beautiful private gardens that give a glimpse of how life in Rio was lived before the town began to grow vertically.

What to do in Rio

But Rio is filled with other interesting things to see besides architecture. Early in your visit you should take the short trip to the top of the Corcovado, a 2,300-foot peak from which you can see most of the city spread out below you. A pleasant way to go is by renting a car for a circular tour of the hills around Rio, stopping at the Paineiros resort hotel for lunch.

A drive along the beaches is the first requirement for Rio, which is truly a city of beaches. For this is the way to get oriented. Most visitors stay at one of the hotels along Copacabana beach, and from there a short drive by taxi takes you past the Ipanema, Leblon, and Gavea beaches which are the main residential sections.

On one of your drives go to the botanical garden, (Jardim Botanico), which is one of the world's most famous collections of tropical plants, shrubs, trees, and flowers. It is more than 140 years old and, consequently, is filled with fully grown specimens of the tropics and jungle which you could not see except by arduous travel into the Amazon jungle. This is truly a must in Rio for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL readers, for you'll see in their native habitat many of the plants we know only as delicate greenhouse darlings. What a difference!

The garden is across the street from the fantastically beautiful Jockey Club race track, and one trip could combine them. Whether you are a race fan or not, you should visit this track at least once, for there is no other like it in the world for sheer beauty.

Going to the races will also give visitors a chance to see many well-dressed Cariocans at close range. The members' stand, especially on an important holiday, is filled with Brazilian families, many with their children. Everyone is beautifully dressed, the women in clothes their dressmakers have made from Paris models, the men in beautifully tailored white suits. Between races both men and women go to a coffee bar to sip a small cup of heavily-sweetened strong black coffee.

The Gavea Golf Club is out in the same direction from downtown as the Jockey Club track. There is a good restaurant, and lunch on the outdoor porch can be a pleasant occasion. Visitors may get a temporary card at the club if they know a member. Another club is the Itanhanga.

What can you buy to take home?

When you ask either an American or a Brazilian what tourists buy to take home, the stock answer is always "semi-precious stones." There is little doubt that aquamarines, tourmalines, kunzites, amethysts, topazes, zircons, and beryls are the best buys in town. All these stones come from the mines of Brazil. They are sold everywhere—in large and small shops, by men in the street, and by the smart jewelry stores. You can buy the stones in many kinds of settings, or you can buy them unmounted. Buying semi-precious stones is like buying diamonds—you are at the mercy of the salesman unless you know what you are buying. A safe rule for unmounted stones would be not to buy them unless you know a jeweler at home who will set them for you. And when you buy mounted stones, examine the mounting carefully. Many are poorly designed and badly made.

Articles made from wood are another worth-while purchase. There are trays, boxes, chess and checker sets, lampshades, canes, and other things carved or made of inlaid designs. There are many novelties made of leather or skin, including alligator handbags and billfolds. Alligator shoes can be bought much cheaper than at home, but the best ones are made to order. Shoemakers like to have a pair of shoes to copy and will finish them in four or five days for around $10. Made-to-order alligator loafers for both men and

Women, however, can do better than men, especially if they are staying long enough to do some leisurely shopping. Rio follows the French tradition in materials, styles, and dressmaking. The well-dressed woman has her clothes made by small dressmakers whose names she gives out only to her best friends. Even if a visiting American learns of such dressmakers, the chances are dresses or blouses could not be made in time to take back. There are some shops where fine linen blouses, linen dresses, and other ready-made things can be bought cheaper than at home. Linen blouses with fine detailing can be bought for around $20, and linen dresses for $55 that would cost two or three times as much at home. There are not the many low-priced accessories that visitors bring back from other South American countries.

Beautiful tropical butterflies can be found in many shops, in picture frames, trays, boxes, etc. But HOUSE BEAUTIFUL readers will be most likely to buy them in temporary settings to take home and mount to suit their own décor.

Where to shop

For jewelry: Mappin & Webb, 101 rua Ouvidor. Gregory & Sheehan, 2nd floor, 65 rua Alfandega. Amsterdam Lapidacao, 251 avenida Rio Branco. Maximino, rua Santa Clara 27B, Copacabana. (Ask the American Embassy about the reputation of the small shops if you plan to make a large purchase.)

For flat silver: Mappin & Webb has fine English plate, cheaper than in the U. S.

For novelties of wood, butterflies, etc.: Casa Zitrin, 110 Buenos Aires. Casa Hugo, 91 Buenos Aires. Small shops along the Praca Maua and avenida Rio Branco and adjoining streets.

For handsome shoes, purses and leather goods: Madame Lascar, 122½ Rio Branco (a tiny shop, but reliable). Men's shoe stores, several along Rio Branco.

Women's dresses, blouses, etc.: Modas-Didi, 23-A rua Senador Dantas (next to Ambassador Hotel). Rose France, on rear side of Copacabana Palace Hotel. Imperial Palace, 157 Ouvidor. Canada de Luxe, 138 A Rio Branco. (Be sure to go to second floor.)

Viennese-type handbags: Fabrica de Tapetes Feito a Mao (known as "Marquettas"), 518 Prai Batofoga.

Rio's hotels

Rio's many hotels are in two groups: those downtown in the business section and those on Copacabana beach. Hotels on the beach are best for visitors as they are cooler, quieter, and have a pleasant vacation atmosphere.

Most famous is the Copacabana Palace. It is the only hotel with a swimming pool, and that makes it the center for Rio's younger set. It has a nicely landscaped terrace on three sides of the pool where anyone (resident or not) may sit and watch the swimmers and have a drink or a meal. Most rooms at the hotel have balconies from which you can see the ocean. Prices for double rooms with twin beds are from $10 to $12 per day without food.

Adjoining the hotel is a new building called the Copacabana Palace Apartments. This is the real luxury place to stay. Most apartments have a living room, bedroom, bath, kitchen, and balcony. Prices are from $14 to $48 per day, without food.

Other beach hotels are the Regente, Olinda, Vogue, Luxor, Martinique, Riviera.

The entire aspect of Rio will change if gambling is again made legal. Much of the social life of the capital was built around the big casinos. Most fabulous gambling resort was the Hotel Quintandinha at Petropolis, some 40 miles up in the mountains. The hotel façade gives it the appearance of an overgrown Swiss chalet. But behind this bit of deception is one of the most expensively-furnished and luxurious hotels in the world, decorated by Dorothy Draper.

Even if you go up and back the same day, you can still arrange to see the town of Petropolis which is a mile or so beyond the hotel. It is Rio's chief summer resort, as its 2,700-ft altitude gives it a cooler climate during Rio's hottest weather, which comes between December and March.

Thirty miles beyond Petropolis is Terezopolis, farther back in the mountains and slightly higher, 2,950 feet. The town itself is not as attractive as Petropolis, but there are more hotels and several are in pleasant rural surroundings. Best-known hotel is the Pension Painheiros, which is a couple of miles outside the town in beautiful mountain surroundings.

Climate and Clothes

As with other countries south of the equator, the seasons are the reverse of ours. But Rio itself has a pleasant year-round climate. Temperature range is from 60° to 90° F. with an average of 74°. In June, July, and August women wear furs in the evening, and men are seldom seen in light-colored suits. But visitors going there from October to May must take cool clothing because Brazil's tropical climate is both too warm and too humid for heavy clothes.

Restaurants

On the whole, the food in Rio is not noted for its originality. Much is a thin version of French recipes with a Spanish twist. You can find plenty of good things to eat, but after you return home you won't be able to remember outstanding dishes of the kind you found in other South American countries. Fish is better than the meat, poultry is fair, pastries are excellent, and of course the coffee is unique once you get used to having it very black and very sweet. Often the place where you eat is more interesting than what you eat.

Get Helen Dunkhorst's A Guide to Rio which costs about a quarter, and can be bought at better newsstands in Rio. It names more than 40 better restaurants.

Getting your visa

You must have a visa to get into Brazil. It may be obtained at no cost from any Brazilian Consulate, and there are offices in New York, Washington, Chicago, Los Angeles, Dallas, Houston, Miami, San Francisco, Savannah, New Orleans, Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, Charleston, Norfolk, Seattle. Your travel agent or airline will give you advice if you don't live near these cities. You must also have:

1. U. S. passport.
2. A properly filled out application blank, which is provided by the Brazilian Consul.
3. 4 photographs, passport size.
4. A letter in duplicate from your bank or employer, saying you have enough funds for your own maintenance in Brazil.
5. A health certificate from your physician, saying you are in good health and have no communicable disease.
6. A smallpox vaccination certificate.
7. Sign a statement (provided by the Consul) that you have no police record or have been refused an earlier visa to Brazil.

How to get to Brazil:

By air: Braniff International Airways. FAMA—Argentine Airline. Pan American Grace Airways. Pan American World Airways.

By steamer: Moore-McCormack Lines, Inc., Lloyd Brasileiro Line. Argentine State Line.

● Here is the way to make the vegetable wreath shown on page 124. Start with a "Styrofoam" wreath which you can find ready-cut in Christmas decoration departments. Get some sharp wooden picks from a florist shop. Put one end of the stick into a potato or white onion or mushroom. The other end goes into the wreath which is a broad circle of porous, white plastic, like frozen snow. Tie metallic leaves to sticks, and fill in around wreath. Finish with a ribbon bow.

● This native version of the familiar Della Robbia wreath is made by the boys of the California Junior Republic at Chino to raise funds to support this community of boys from broken homes. They use native materials, small oranges, lemons, apples, sycamore balls, varieties of seed pods, small pine cones, magnolia leaves. Wreaths are shipped everywhere. No two are identical.

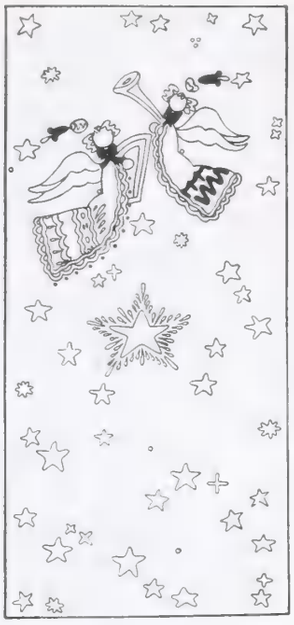
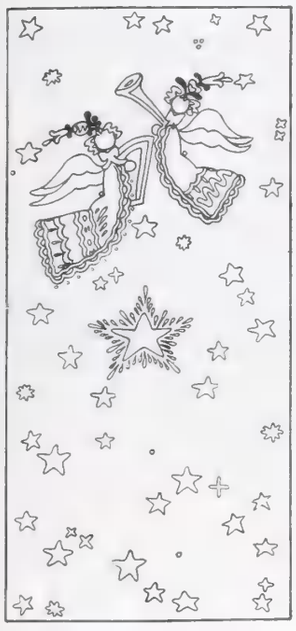
1. Paint the pane Admiralty blue. While it dries, practice the "basic strokes" explained at the bottom of the page opposite. Paint the motifs indicated in Chinese red.

2. Mix a little red and white paint to make pink. Use in the darkened spaces on chart. This is the procedure from now on: add each new color to the black areas on each chart.



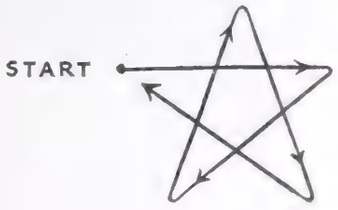
3. Primrose yellow in this step. Let each color dry until tacky before adding the next. Use this short drying time to practice "strokes." Stars, which look so tricky, are easy.

4. Mix yellow and red. Add slowly and test color. Then paint the dark areas with this orange shade. Two water-color brushes with 3/8" and 3/4" bristles are all you need.



5. Add white. See how the outlines and a few scattered stars make the design stand out. Erase mistakes with turpentine. Keep a bottle and clean-brush cloths handy.

6. Mix a little Admiralty blue and white. Paint the darkened areas of this sketch with the light blue. See how each addition is really a variation of the basic "stroke."



ALL SKETCHES BY MARTIN WARSHOW

7. A few touches of dark green. Don't get careless and skip even the tiny details, for they make the finished job. Don't worry about irregularities in strokes. They add charm.

8. Finishing touch: black dots for eyes and red dots for lips and cheeks. Now fasten the panel to the four corners of your door with four brads. You can remove and store it easily.

Follow the arrow to make the star outline. It's easy. Next stroke is the basic one used in all the motifs on the panel. Start with a flat brush. Gradually lift until only the point touches. It's one sweeping stroke. Short curved "basic" strokes, joined together, make the border. Peter Hunt's "Transformagic by du Pont" tells you more about painting.

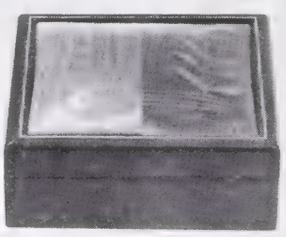
They are satisfied to have Professor John Dewey speak for them, when he explains in his book, Art as Experience, that it is depth of perception and feeling in the making of a work that marks the difference between what is fine or aesthetic in art and what is not. Whether the thing made is put to use, as are bowls, rugs, garments, weapons, he says, is, intrinsically speaking, a matter of indifference.

Bowl with richly colored leaf pattern enameled on copper by Virgil Cantini.

Among the finest of contemporary craftwork available today, you will find ceramics by "fine" artists such as painter Henry Varnum Poor, who makes all of his own pottery from start to finish. Carol Janeway, who won distinction as a sculptor, has turned to ceramic tiles. There are dozens of others.

In addition, of course, there are hundreds of artists who have designed useful objects to be executed in multiple either by skilled craftsmen or by the machine. Similarly, there are hundreds of skilled craftsmen who contribute exquisite workmanship to designs created by others or inherited from past generations. Their products, being artist-designed and handmade, are often both beautiful and useful. But they do not have the same one-of-a-kind distinction, the same life-of-their-own vitality, as the work of the artist-craftsman who designs as he goes.



It should go without saying that the mere fact that a useful object is made by hand does not make it fine art. Today, as always, the country is overflowing with useless trash that is neither well designed nor well fabricated, even if it does legally rate a "handmade" label. Some of this is the work of amateurs with less talent than they think. Some of it comes out of "studios" where, too often, inferior designs are duplicated by the hundreds in an assembly-line system of hand labor.

How can you tell the difference between this stuff and the fine work of the true artist-craftsman? It is the trained eye that counts—the perception acquired by looking at hundreds of examples of the finest work as well as hundreds of the mediocre. Museums of fine art have long offered this opportunity to students of painting and sculpture. They are now beginning to offer you similar opportunities for studying fine craftwork. Museums in Wichita, Colorado Springs, Des Moines, and Syracuse, for instance, have developed intensive programs of crafts sponsorship, although there is practically no museum of any standing in the country which does not show contemporary crafts objects from time to time.

We have emphasized the number of painters and sculptors who have turned craftsmen as an indication of our changed attitudes toward the art of creating useful objects. But for every well-known artist of national reputation engaged in crafts, there are thousands of unknown workers all up and down the country quietly weaving rugs, making pottery, molding silver, forging iron. They work in big cities, in small towns, even in the backwoods, making objects of great beauty and individuality. They are necessarily small producers and few turn out enough to achieve anything like national distribution. But there are great rewards in store if you will take the trouble to hunt up those in your own back yard.

Many of them are equipped to create special pieces to meet individual requirements. They bring to the things they make something of the flavor of their own part of the country, as well as of themselves.

Leather-covered cigarette box with rose and gold enameled top by Carl Winter.

Young craftsmen in various parts of the country are more apt to be influenced by outstanding talents and teachers with whom they work than by local geographical or ideological factors. In California, for instance, some of the best ceramics suggest the delicacy of material and flaring form which are hallmarks of the work of Gertrud and Otto Natzler, widely known as teachers as well as top ceramists.

Useful objects are obviously made to be used, and before they can be used they must be bought. The average craftsman is apt to be no great shakes as a salesman. For one thing, he hasn't the time. But this job has been taken over for him by a number of non-profit organizations. One is the American Craftsmen's Cooperative Council with more than ten thousand members, which operates America House in New York, and also distributes to numerous shops throughout the country.

The oldest craft co-operative in the United States—The Society of Arts and Crafts of Boston—which dates back to the end of the last century, represents more than 600 craftsmen scattered over the country and operates its own shop in Boston. New Hampshire developed the first state-sponsored handcraft organization in the country—the League of New Hampshire Arts and Crafts—which operates eleven shops throughout the state. Other states have established similar organizations on a somewhat smaller scale. In addition, there are a number of privately owned stores throughout the country whose owners are continually ferreting out the best craftwork in their localities for presentation to the public.

The products of American craftsmen are being increasingly well received by the public because they are being increasingly well designed. There is, however, another reason. It is fundamental in the American character to want to be "different." "I celebrate myself," sang Walt Whitman. Americans must celebrate themselves, their own tastes, the differences between them. They will not be made automatons by their machines. They will buy and enjoy the fine refrigerators and washing machines turned out by their factories, the beautifully designed and perfectly manufactured furniture, the attractive, inexpensive, assembly-line glassware.

But now we have emerged from our national adolescence, when immaturity and insecurity took shelter in conformity. We will not permit our homes to be carbon copies of all others. It is part of our typically common-sense approach to all things that, having discovered that crafts objects can be simultaneously useful, beautiful, and "different," we are supporting the movement with enthusiasm and purchase.

RECORDS FOR CHRISTMAS

Quartet (V). The two latest albums of a series.

Bach: Six Brandenburg Concerti (3 Volumes). Fritz Reiner conducting Soloists and Chamber Group (C). All of these glorious works, splendidly played.

Those who "have everything" and want something unique

Modern Music for Strings, Shostakovich. Bartok. Rachmaninoff. Alan Shulman. Hindemith; Stuyvesant Sinfonietta, Sylvan Shulman, conductor (C.)

Bach: Bach's Royal Instrument (2 Volumes), E. Power Biggs, organ (V).

Bartok: Six Quartets, Juilliard String Quartet (C). An important contribution to recorded catalog.

For lovers of the theater

Now you can get complete plays perpetuated on records: The Cocktail Party (Decca) and Death of a Salesman with Thomas Mitchell. Listening to the latter play, I thought it as moving in the living room as it was in the theater. There is also a complete Peter Pan with Jean Arthur and Boris Karloff (C), which, I confess, I did not enjoy but which, no doubt, children would.

The best of all of these complete show albums is, in my opinion, Gian-Carlo Menotti's The Consul (Decca), dramatically engrossing and musically sure and original.

house. "Good" meant fancy, suitable for company and for occasional gingerly use by the family on Thanksgiving, Christmas, and feast days. But between feasts the "good" glass grew dusty-dim on the shelves. There were whole batteries of it—tottery-stemmed champagnes, port wine glasses, washbasin-size finger bowls—to name a few—which rarely saw daylight at all, save for the semi-annual cleaning-down of the closets.

This represented the same kind of thinking that distinguished the old ladies who wore calico but who kept a black silk dress in their closets just to be buried in. And it is a philosophy which has fortunately gone out the window as we have come to set less store on what is proper than on what is sensible. It is part of our natural evolution, as social and economic changes in our life have matured our customs.

Today it would be laughable to give any collection of useless objects house room, because space is limited and, measured in terms of dollars and cents, costly, and everything that takes up room must pay its way. Without servants, we must make everything we own work for us.

That is the reason why we say you can only get the fullest enjoyment from your glassware if you choose it to chime in with the way you actually live, not the daydream you may have of how you wish you could live. When you go

"Conqueror of time and place"

writes Rebecca West about Arturo Toscanini

"The obvious parallel to Toscanini is Verdi. What would be old age to other men could not impair their genius. Toscanini can be thirty while at the same time he is eighty-three. But he triumphs over place as well as time. He can be a brilliant Italian, like Verdi, and he can be a majestic German, like Beethoven. He enters into the mind of every composer he interprets and becomes each of them, no matter how individual and how local they may be; yet he remains himself, with his individual glory."

to buy, evaluate honestly the kind of family you are. And from this gauge your needs.

You may find that your living runs the gamut from barbecue suppers in the back yard to formal sitdown dinners, with frequent semi-formal luncheons in between. In that case you need something of everything. See our suggestions for all on pages 134 through 135. But the most frequent hazard, particularly in making your first purchase of glass, is to plan your glass as if dinner-at-eight were your chief concern, without any regard for the exigencies of perpetually servantless meals for the family and frequently for your guests.

BUT whatever shape and form of glass fits your living best, we urge you to enjoy glass that is beautiful and excellently made—two attributes which usually go hand in hand, because skill and ingredients that constitute quality in glass make it clear, sparkling, resonant, and generally handsome. It is good to know that, even if yours is an active, informal group, the most rugged glass nowadays can be a lovely thing to look at. So you can let your family live day in and day out with the lucid gleam and sparkle of fine glass, without having to worry about its fragility. On the other hand, reflect on the future of fragile stemware in such a household. You either throw caution to the winds and use it profligately, winding up with hardly any or none or a sorry assortment of chipped numbers of which you are thoroughly ashamed and in constant jeopardy. Or you put a taboo on it and condemn your loved ones to life with jelly glasses, except for Big Occasions. Like the black silk dress. Get the idea?

The soundest advice we can give you is demonstrated on pages 130 and 131. In other words, plan on variety of pattern rather than on a variety of kinds of glass. Five shapes of glass, which can do double and triple duty, insure an investment of service without deadheads which are used only occasionally. Then, since you have not invested too heavily in any one pattern, it is no extravagance but good sense to invest in extras—unusual shapes or colors, say, that can give variety and spice to your table settings. A few odd pieces of stemware, salad plates or bowls provide the kind of mealtime drama we talk about on pages 136 and 137, which turns even simple meals into something to remember.

You will buy glass, as most people buy most things, first of all because of the way it looks. For the most part, it is safe to say that the best glass is the best-looking. Lead glass, or flint glass, frequently called lead crystal, is considered the finest. (Crystal, by the way, is technically quartz, but in America the word crystal, as applied to glass, merely means its clear color, but the word does carry a connotation of elegance.) Clarity, whiteness, brilliance, and a long-ringing tone when the glass is tapped are characteristics of fine lead glass. This comes about from the addition of a lead oxide to the potash and silica mix of which finest glass is made. Lead crystal is also more easily and beautifully cut and engraved. Much glass is made from silica and soda ash. Common glass such as jelly jars, bottles, and the cheapest tableware usually contains lime, and, as you have probably noticed yourself, tends to have a greenish or murky yellow cast.

Possibly the most surprising single bit of information that most machine-conditioned Americans can learn about the glass they buy is that for the most part the glass made in America is handmade, or it is so thoroughly dependent upon human skill that the industry has many of the earmarks of a handcraft. There are some thoroughly bewildering and nearly human machines which produce extremely good-looking glass at extremely pleasant prices, but to date such machine-made glass cannot approach the handmade for resonance or exquisite decoration.

THE scientists may weigh out the formulas of the batch and machines may carry and mix and heat it, but it is the glass blower who fashions by his own breath and instinct most of the glass we casually accept on our tables. Using tools which are essentially the counterparts of those used in Roman days, he works on the strange, red hot, molten fluid, with little else to rely on but his own skill and judgment. To acquire such talent is a lifetime job. When you consider the uniformity, dependability, and common availability of glass that is so made, this doesn't merely explain what you get for your money in American handmade glass—it makes you wonder how it can be produced at the price.

In made-in-America glass you naturally stand a better chance of getting that look or design feeling which we identify with the American Style. You can get it, of course, in the finest foreign glass, too, as witness the pieces we have shown on our earlier pages. But these are designs of notable manufacturers, and not to be confused with some of the job-lot glassware from abroad that occasionally gets on our market. This kind of glass, which is usually distinguished by a remarkably low price tag, may have a strong appeal if you're watching a budget, but the best advice seems to be "Don't." Even if it isn't all flossied up style-wise and even if it doesn't have a long-stemmed, disaster-inviting, un-American silhouette, it may pose other problems that won't make it an asset once you've acquired it. It may not, for instance, be able to take it as consistently as most homemade glass can. You have come to expect pretty rugged service from glass, and that is chiefly because our manufacturers have worked hard to perfect formulas and manufacturing methods by which our glass can have toughness and easy adaptability to changes in temperature without sacrificing luster and clarity. Our glass is made to have these qualities consistently, so that you can always expect and receive the same kind of reaction.

Another feature, so well known and accepted by us that we may be inclined to forget its existence, is the open-stock plan. It means that a manufacturer in offering a glassware pattern to the public is prepared to make that pattern for a good time to come, so that replacements are easily and dependably available as they are needed. But this is a service you mustn't count on if you buy anonymous-glassware. The chances are that you'll end up with a broken lot of mismates which can never be mated.

Nothing can guarantee that your glass will last forever, but about the best guarantees we know are to buy appropriately shaped and styled glass for the use you will give it, and then, of course, provide the most sensible treatment you can. Your finest glass will require the most tender care, but you are rewarded by its exquisite sparkle.

There are several schools of thought on glass nurturing, but all are agreed that you must never subject glass to the straining extremes of heat or cold. It cracks under expansion or contraction. Never, for instance, hold it under a hot water faucet. Always put a spoon in a glass before pouring in hot liquid. If you're serving ice cream on a glass plate, insulate the glass from the chill by first putting a paper doily on the plate.

Detergents, such as Glim, Tide, Vel, Dreft, do a particularly successful job in cleaning glass and keeping it sparkling. You can use these with warm water. If you rinse, use cool water. And here technique varies. One school prefers to let the glass dry of its own accord. Others recommend drying with a lintless linen towel. But whatever you do, you will safeguard your glass against chipping if you wash it in a pan or sink lined with a towel or a rubber mat. Drain it either on a towel or a rubber mat. A new one on the market has sides to prevent glass from falling off, and raised ridges to facilitate draining.

If two glasses are piled one in the other and you can't get them apart, don't pull. The technique is to fill the inner glass with cold water and set the outer glass in warm water, and they will separate.

Family gift

If you (a) hate to push a lawnmower and (b) get a kick out of running a power mower, this is the year for the family to get together and buy you a power mower for Christmas. Most manufacturers put the 1951 models on sale this month. Biggest change from last year occurs in the Moto-Mower line. Look especially at their new 20" "Trimmer Twenty."

How to propagate color

Fall color was unusually good up our way (Connecticut) this year. But as always, there were a few outstanding trees. Did you know that better nurseries propagate from these trees of exceptional brilliance? This guarantees you trees of a definite color.

Barberry is versatile

Barberry seems to have fallen into disfavor now that it has become the accepted substitute for the "too common" privet. Barberry deserves better treatment than this. It is a highly adaptable plant, sturdy, and pest-free. Newer varieties offer wonderful fall foliage color, also brilliant berries. There's even an upright variety ideal for hedges —needs only occasional light pruning to keep it in shape.

Climate improvers

We are getting a new appreciation of hedges now that the HOUSE BEAUTIFUL research on Climate Control has shown their great value. Locate them properly and they keep out unwanted breezes, or funnel breezes into otherwise stagnant spots.

Holly can take it

All of the two-dozen plants of Japanese Holly that I planted in September, 1949, survived the winter (Connecticut) last year and are thriving now. The most exposed plants "burned" slightly.

Late fall flowers

You can't beat the hardy fall asters for dependable bloom during the weeks between the first frost of fall (end of bloom for tender summer flowers) and the close of the garden year with the arrival of a real freeze. Look for them in the plant sections of the catalogs—not in seed sections. The latter are for the tender, China aster.

Christmas books

Looking for Christmas gift books for ardent gardeners? Give Garrett Eckbo's Landscape for Living (F. W. Dodge Corp., New York) or Dr. Brook's translation of Geiger's The Climate near the Ground (Harvard University Press, Cambridge, Mass.

Speed

Need a fast growing tree? Try Hercules Club (Aralia spinosa) for a shrubby tree that gets only 12 to 15 feet high. Or plant a Colonial-locust, Siebenthaler's new thornless honeylocust, if you want a big shade tree comparable to an American elm in size and shape but not susceptible to elm diseases.

Leaf raking

Do you still rake leaves off the lawn? Have a look at the new Jacobsen leaf mill (October, page 231). It's the slickest machine yet for taking the work out of this tiresome job. I didn't have to get a rake out once this fall—and we get leaves six inches deep from our big oaks and hickories. The same machine converts to a reel-type power mower for spring and summer operation. You can get a sickle-bar mower for it for tall grass.

Show date

Camellia shows start next month. I hope to get to the Charleston, S. C., show on January 27 and 28.

Scutl this winter

If you are trying to keep your lawn grass green this winter (October, page 172), you may want to try making a December application of "Scutl," the crabgrass killer. Its makers report that the same mercury compound that kills crabgrass in the summer is also just the right winter treatment for snowmold and similar blight diseases that kill patches of lawn during mild winters.

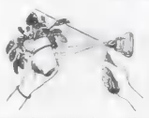
Package with plusses

Few winter holiday packages produce more plums than that now offered for the first time by Canadian Pacific's fabulous Chateau Frontenac. It's a package of three-, seven-, or ten-day visits, starting from arrival time in Quebec City. First, there's a greeter at the Palais Station who, having greeted, provides transportation up the storied heights to the hotel. After that come your room and all meals. And now for the fun. Your package includes also free daily transportation by bus the nine miles to the Lac Beauport ski slopes, and free use of the Alpine lift. And if, after a day on the slopes, you are still so inclined, it permits free use of the Chateau's skating rink and toboggan slide on Dufferin Terrace, whence it also provides a snowy view of the broad St. Lawrence below and, if you're lucky, a moon! All this, and the Chateau too, at $49 each for two for three days, $110 for seven days, $150 for ten.

Kasbah

Subtract Hedy Lamarr, Charles Boyer, and the Hollywood touch, and a visit to a Kasbah will still be one of the more glamorous adventures on your Mediterranean cruise itinerary this winter. Along the Barbary Coast of French North Africa, the word "kasbah" means citadel. And in the elderly cities from which Algerian princes once exacted tribute from the rest of the world, these citadels were built high for protection so that today they offer exceptionally fine viewpoints. They were also headquarters for all types of skulduggery, as testified by relics and a certain flavor which lingers there even today, thus enhancing the adventure of the place so far as tourists are concerned. The most frequently visited Kasbah is that in Algiers, where 500 steps ascend to a web of narrow crooked streets, alive with cafés and bazaars. The palace of the Deys is now in ruins, but the chair on which the heads of Christian slaves were exposed is still there for you to see. Some cruises also provide shore visits to the Kasbah of the Oudaiahs at Rabat, Morocco, where there are lovely gardens, a Moslem college, minarets, a Moorish café serving mint tea and again a splendid view; and that at Tangier, where you will see the ruins of the dungeon of the Pasha Sidi Abdullah, and which you leave by the historic Flogging Gate.

All this and ocean, too



A minimum of beach-combing along Southern California's 200 miles of gorgeous coast will convince you that its fifty-odd ocean-side resorts not only make prime winter vacationland, but vary widely in atmosphere, activity, and personal appeal to holiday-makers. All specialize in scenery, but even that varies, from the dramatic headlands off La Jolla to the parade of ocean-going vessels in San Diego Harbor. And there's a variety of ways to see it. The excursion boat to Catalina Island will give you one view, such ocean cliff-side drives as the Seventeen-Mile Drive around Monterey Peninsula another. Or you can see it from a comfortable deep-sea fishing boat almost anywhere, or from a beach-side hotel at such sea-bordering places as Oceanside. The newly enlarged beach at Venice on Santa Monica Bay near Hollywood, for instance, is primarily a sports center, with parking areas, and facilities for volleyball, table tennis, weight lifting, handball, shuffleboard. Others, like Carmel-by-the-Sea and Laguna, are cosmopolitan communities on their own, beloved by artists and writers, busy with little theaters and concerts, with a mission near by, perhaps, or some really noteworthy history to reward thoughtful investigation, and fabulous hotels and gourmet restaurants. To do some advance beach-combing, and make sure the Southern California beach resort of your choice is really for you, write the All Year Club of Southern California, 629 South Hill Street, Los Angeles 14, and/or the San Diego-California Club, 499 Broadway, San Diego 1.

Sun Valley's for you

Don't let the glitter around the name Sun Valley keep you from considering it for your very own winter escape trip. It's true that Sun Valley deals in superlatives all the way from its facilities and service to the names on its roster. But the Union Pacific Railroad also had you and me in mind when it designed Sun Valley. At the Lodge, you can pay up to $44 a day without meals for a suite with a private sun deck. But there are also the Challenger Inn, where prices are from $6, and the Swiss-type Ski Chalets where you can occupy a very comfortable bunk for $2. By taking advantage of these, you can do quite nicely at Sun Valley for no more than $100 a week, with full use of its 30 ski slopes and other facilities as desired. And, during the special Learn-to-Ski Weeks, this will cost you only $75. See the Union Pacific for a railroad trip out, United Airlines if you want to fly, or your travel agent for either and others.

Let these make your next trip shorter, faster, more luxurious, more fun!

To South America—Panagra's El Inter Americano Fiesta Lounge flights, leaving Miami every Monday and Thursday, only 19 hours and 5 minutes to Buenos Aires via the west coast, surcharge Miami to Lima, $5; Miami to Santiago and Buenos Aires, $10. The usual El Inter Americano refinements plus a smartly decorated lounge, soft lights, Chilean wines, and orchids for the ladies.

Mt. Hood, Oregon—Ready at last this month, the new Skyway from Government Camp to Timberline Lodge ski slopes. The first aerial tramway in the Far West, it will waft you up in 36-passenger cable-operated cars.

Broadway—Via one of the New York, New Haven and Hartford's Show Trains, the easier way to see the season's harder-to-get hits. Theater and train tickets may be purchased simultaneously at any of the railroad's stations.

Tacoma, Washington—The recently completed Tacoma Narrows Bridge short-cuts the automobile route across Puget Sound between Tacoma and the Hood Canal area to cut some 100 miles of driving for visitors to Olympic Peninsula.

Pets are now welcome aboard United Airlines planes, which will rent you a special "flight kennel" for $5, and charge transportation off as excess baggage if it goes on the same flight as you, or carry it at customary air freight rates if your pet goes by himself.

South Africa by automobile. Check with Thos. Cook & Son on 18-, 28-, 36-, and 49-day itineraries out of Capetown, in modern American-made automobiles with English speaking courier guides for as little as $15 a day.

To Kansas City—If, now and then, this modern world seems too much for you, take the Santa Fe's new Kansas City Chief, whose Centennial lounge-breakfast car is deliberately 1890 in décor, from swinging oil-type lamps to marble-top tables and plenty of plush.

Cranberry Christmas

For a sauce-y Christmas, try Edaville, Mass. For here on Route 58 in South Carver, Massachusetts, (or look for directing signs in Plymouth or Wareham) is one of the country's largest cranberry plantations. It has the only two-foot gauge railroad in the U.S., a combination intriguing any time of the year, with Christmas merely pointing up its toy-town flavor. The railroad is half hobby, half business to Ellis D. Atwood, who owns Edaville. Its miniature equipment, painstakingly collected, tenderly reconditioned, includes freight cars which service the cranberry crop as well as the tiny coaches and Gay Nineties parlor cars which take visitors on a six-mile circuit of bog, reservoir, and pleasant pine woodland. A real treat anytime, but more so at Christmas, when trains, station, and even the snow-stenciled pines rimming the frozen bogs are decorated with lights. Trains run afternoons all year on a pleasantly informal schedule. For you don't mind waiting in the Edaville Station, which is light, warm, pleasant, and serves innumerable concoctions including many basically cranberry, and sells the makings canned. You'll want to take home cranberry juice, for instance, and try out on your friends Edaville's cranberry frappé: juice plus vanilla ice ceam beaten to a froth. And you'll want to take home others for more leisurely sampling. A six-can box, including whole cranberries, sauce, jellied sauce, juice, marmalade and raspberry-cranberry mix, is $2.
